A

DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Where this mark * follows the word, it signifies that such word is not to be found in the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson.

Where this mark † follows the word, it signifies that addition or alteration is made in respect either to the etymology, or definition, or example, of the word given by Dr. Johnson.

I.

I, Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final: and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a dipthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a dipthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as, jade, jet, jill, jolt, just.

I.† pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch; ig, eg, Icel. ego, Lat. ἐγω, Gr.]

I, gen. &c. me; plural we, gen. &c. us.
Sax. ic dat. &c. me; plural pe, dat. &c. uƿ.
Goth. ik gen. meina; plural weis, dat. &c. uns, unsis.

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several councils, I. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

There is none greater in this house than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.

Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. St. Matt. xiv. 27.

What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own?
I shall like beasts or common people die,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me! Cowley.

When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder, do? Cowley.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden, Æn.

Of night impatient we demand the day,
The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Richardson, Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakspeare written for ay, or yes. Dr. Johnson. — It was usual in the time of Shakspeare, and later, to write the affirmative article ay in the form of I, and was not merely poetical custom.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shakspeare.

Did your letters pierce the queen?
— I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakspeare,

I, now the spheres are in their tunes again. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

There cannot be imagined an example more exactly suiting, more closely applicable to his intent, which was not to discredit and dishearten his followers, by comparing, I, and preferring the cunning of an ordinary fellow. Chillingworth, Works, (ed. 1704,) p. 381.

4. I, prefixed to a word, is common in our old language, as well as y; as ibrought, ibuilt, ybuilt, yblessed; and is the Saxon prepositive particle ʒe. It is merely a redundancy.

To JA'BBER.† v. n. [gabbaren, Dutch. See To GAB, and To GABBLE. Jabber is old in our language; though Dr. Johnson maintains it only by the modern authority of Swift.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

Censynge, Latyne jabberinge, and wawlynge, accordynge to the office of saynt Antonynes personage.
Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 43. b.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.

JA'BBERER. n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JA'BBERMENT.* n. s. [from jabber.] Idle talk; prate.

We are come to his farewell, which is to be a concluding taste of his jabberment in the law. Milton, Colasterion.

JA'BBERNOWL.* See JOBBERNOWL.

JA'CENT. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacent posture. Wotton, Architect.

JACI'NTH. n. s. [for hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hyacinth.
2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

JACK.† n. s. [probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James. Dr. Johnson. — Jak, Jaky, old French. Kelham. — I know not how it has happened, that, in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence zany; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose Jack ass has the same etymology. Tyrwhitt.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paultry fellows.

I know some pepper-nosed dame
Will term me fool and saucy Jack,
That dare their credit so defame,
And lay such slanders on their back.
H. Gifford, Posie of Gilliflowers, (1580.)

Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.
Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

You will perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks
Which I will practise. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.
Shakspeare, Cymb.

A company of scoffers and proud Jacks are commonly conversant and attendant in such places.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 291.

I met some Jack lords going into my grove, but I think I have nettled them! Bp. Ward, Pope's Life of Ward, p. 47.

Such, especially if they are broken gamesters, I still say are no better than Jack gent.
Bp. Parker, Rehears. Transpr. p. 480.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of Jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters' boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts, Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm.
Moxon, Mech. Ex.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkin's Math. Magick.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wiseman, Surgery.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks
Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike. [perhaps from the Lat. jaculum. Skinner.]

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. A coat of mail. [old French jaque, or jake; Germ. jacke; Dutch, jack; Ital. giacco.] A coat of mail; a kind of military coat put over the coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather. See BLACK-JACK.

Small jacks we have in many ale-houses of the city and suburbs, tipt with silver.
Heywood, Drunkard opened, &c. (1635,) p. 45.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple-cup. Dryden, Pers.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the musical instruments called a virginal, a harpsichord, a spinet.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

Those jacks that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand. Shakspeare, Sonn.

Your teeth did dance like virginal jacks. B. Jonson, Fox.

It plays on the harpsicon the while, whose jacks are the pebble-stones, checking the little waves as strings.
Parth. Sacra. p. 210.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot on Coins.

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsworth.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsworth.

Nothing was to be seen aloft but ensigns, jacks, streamers, and the heads of sailors. Drummond, Trav. p. 71.

12. In Yorkshire, half a pint. Grose. A quarter of a pint. Pegge.

13. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing, in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, show and sound;
An inverse burse, an exchange under ground. Cleaveland.

14. Used by Shakspeare for Jack with the lantern.

Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.
Shakspeare, Tempest.

JACK Boots. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commode and a night-rail. Spectator.

JACK by the Hedge. n. s. Erysimum.

Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other sallards are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.

JACK of the Clock-house. * n. s. The little man that strikes the quarters in a clock, jacquelet. Cotgrave. This kind of automaton may yet be seen in some of our market-towns, as well as at St. Dunstan's Church in London.

My time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Is this your Jack o' the clock-house? —
Will you strike, sir? Beaum. and Fl. Coxcomb.

JACK Pudding. n. s. [jack and pudding.] A zany; a merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean potage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at every packet. Gay.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

JACK with a Lantern. † An ignis fatuus. See IGNIS FATUUS.

It treats of subjects of a vague nature, and is of a mere Jack-lantern nature, neither here nor there!
The Student, ii. 352.

He has played Jack with a lanthern, he has led us about like an ignis fatuus, by which travellers are decoyed into the mire. Johnson, Note on Shakspeare's Tempest.

JA'CKALENT. † n. s. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow. Dr. Johnson. — This is not so. A Jack-o-Lent was a puppet formerly thrown at in Lent, like shrove-cocks. Neither is Dr. Johnson's definition of a "simple, sheepish fellow" applicable to the solitary example which he cites from Shakspeare. It is there applied to Falstaff's page, little Robin, an intelligent lad, in a joking manner.] A sort of puppet.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us? —
— Ay, I'll be sworn. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

On an Ash-Wednesday,
Where thou didst stand six weeks the Jack o' Lent,
For boys to hurl three throws a penny at thee.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Push-pin is too high for him; he is fit for no other employment than to catch shadows and jackalents; for though they are meer nothings, yet to children they appear as it were something. Bp. Parker, Rehear. Transpr. p. 204.

JACKA'L. n. s. [chacal, Fr.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send:
Close by their fireships, like jackals appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lyon, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbuthnot and Pope.

JA'CKANAPES. † n. s. [jack and ape. Dr. Johnson.— I find it no where used, according to Dr. Johnson's first definition, for a monkey or ape. The second sense, applied to a coxcomb or impertinent person, is very old in our language. In an ancient ballad, about 1399, Jack Nape or Napes is satirically used in six of the stanzas, and is supposed by Mr. Ritson to be a nickname for John Holland, duke of Exeter, or Thomas Holland, duke of Surrey. See Ritson's Anc. Songs, 1790, p. 59. Mr. Ritson gives us no further information. It seems to me probable, that Jack Napes, or Jack-a-Napes, was first applied to some mimick; whence the application to an affected fellow. Skelton says,

"He grins and he gapes,
"As it were Jack Napes." Poems, p. 160.

And Bale, "He played Jacke-a-napes, swearynge by his tenne bones." Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, 1543, fol. 92. And nearly a century afterwards, "Like a come-aloft jacanapes." Sheldon's Miracles of Antichrist, 1616, p. 24. And so Marston, "Down, Jack-an-apes from thy feign'd royalty." Scourge of Villany, B. 3. Sat. 9. (1599.) This naturally refers us to the tricks of the ape; and the corruption of Jack Napes is easily accounted for by the various writing or pronunciation of that word. Ape is a word of great antiquity.]

1. Monkey; an ape.
2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?
— That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakspeare.

People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arbuthnot.

JA'CKASS. * See the etymology of JACK, and Dr. Johnson's ninth definition of that word.

JACKDA'W. † n. s. [from jack and daw, Dr. Johnson says; calling it "a cock daw." — It is the Teut. gacke, the "menedula" or daw, with the addition of our own word.] A species of the crow.

Not all unlyke unto Esope's chough, whom we commonly call Jacke dawe. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 87.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

JA'CKET. n. s. [jaquette, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

JA'COB'S Ladder. n. s. Polemonium; the same with Greek valerian.

JA'COB'S Staff. † n. s.

1. A pilgrim's staff. [from St. Jacob, or James, the pretended patron of pilgrims.]
2. Staff concealing a dagger.
3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

Reach then a soaring quill that I may write,
As with a Jacob's staff to take her height.
Cleaveland, Hec. to his Mistress, p. 11.

Why on a sign no painter draws
The full-moon ever, but the half,
Resolve that with your Jacob's staff Hudibras, ii. iii.

JA'COBIN, or JA'COBINE. * n. s. [Fr. Jacobin, from the Lat. Jacobus, as having some pretended reference or allusion to St. James.]

1. A friar of the order of St. Dominick; a gray or white friar.

Now I am Robert, now Robin,
Now frere Minor, now Jacobin. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6338.

This king went in danger of his life, a long while sought by a capuchin; — who at length was taken, and executed, together with another Jacobine for the same crime. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

2. One of an execrable faction in the late French democratical revolution, distinguished by their hatred of religion, monarchy, and social order; so called from their meeting at the church of St. Jacobus, or a monastery of the Jacobin friars; one who approves or maintains the principles of such.

With the Jacobins of France, vague intercourse is without reproach; marriage is reduced to the vilest concubinage; children are encouraged to cut the throats of their parents; mothers are taught that tenderness is no part of their character. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

We are not to conclude that all, who are not Jacobins, are conscientiously attached to the established church. Bp. Horsley, Charge.

JA'COBIN.* } adj. Of the principles of modern JACOBI'NICAL. } Jacobins.

They knew from the beginning that the Jacobin party was not confined to that country. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

JA'COBINISM.* n. s. The principles of a modern Jacobine.

When to these establishments of regicide, of jacobinism, and of atheism, you add the correspondent system of manners, no doubt can be left on the mind of a thinking man, concerning their determined hostility to the human race. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

May the more recent spirit of jacobinism have a still quicker termination. Mason, Note to Isis.

To JA'COBINIZE.* v. a. To infect with Jacobinism.

France was not then jacobinized. Burke.

JA'COBINE. n. s. A pigeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.

JA'COBITE.* n. s.

1. One of a sect of hereticks, who were anciently a branch of the Eutychians, and are still subsisting in the Levant.

The Jacobites took their denomination from one Jacob, a Syrian, who began to disseminate his doctrines in the East about the close of the sixth century. His sect are sometimes distinguished by the name of Monophysites, the progeny of the Eutychians, who asserted the single nature of Christ, in opposition to the orthodox, who maintained that his nature was twofold, human and divine. Professor White's Serm. Notes, p. ix.

2. One attached to the cause of king James the second after his abdication, and to his line. [from Jacobus, Lat. for James.]

He is writing an epigram to a young virgin, who knits very well: It is a thousand pities he is a Jacobite; but his epigram is by way of advice to this damsel, to knit all the actions of the Pretender, and the duke of Burgundy's last campaign, in the clock of a stocking. Tatler, No. 3.

JA'COBITE.* adj. [from the noun.] Of the principles of Jacobites.

The whole tory party was become avowedly jacobite. Ld. Bolingbroke.

JA'COBITISM.* n. s. The principles of a Jacobite.

The spirit of Jacobitism, which had obtained in both our Universities before the year 1745, was far from being quite extinguished in 1748. Mason, Note to Isis.

JACO'BUS.* n. s. [Lat.] A gold coin, worth twenty-five shillings, so called from king James the first of England, in whose reign it was struck.

The women have taken a fancy to prefer guineas and jacobusses. L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo, p. 273.

JA'CKSMITH.* n. s. [jack and smith.] A maker of the engine called a jack.

Tompion, the celebrated watchmaker, was originally a jacksmith. Malone, Note on Dryden, i. ii. 49.

JACTITA'TION. n. s. [jactito, Lat.]

1. Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surprised with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

To JA'CULATE.* v. a. [Latin, jaculo.] To dart. Cockeram.

JACULA'TION.† n. s. [jaculatio, Lat.] The act of throwing missive weapons.

It was well and strongly strung with 36 barrels of gunpowder, great and small, for the more violent jaculation, vibration, and speed of the arrows. Dean King, Serm. 5. Nov. 1608, p. 20.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton, P. L.

JA'CULATORY.* adj. [from To jaculate; Fr. jaculatoire.]

1. Throwing out. Bullokar.

2. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences; ejaculatory.

Jaculatory prayers are the nearest dispositions to contemplation. Sp. Conq. Maxims of Myst. Divinity, (1651,) p. 81.

JADE.† n. s. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur. Dr. Johnson. — Hickes and Serenius observe that the Icel. jalkr, or jaelkr, is an aged horse; from jad, loss of teeth.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag; and sometimes a vicious horse.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overloaden cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakspeare.

If we kick when your honour spur us,
We are knaves and jades! Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

So have I seen with armed heel,
A wight bestride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spurr'd,
The less the sullen jade has stirr'd. Hudibras.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags: —
The squyre, arriving, fiercely in his arms
Snatch'd first the one, and then the other jade. Spenser, F. Q.

Shall these, these old jades, past the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you? Chapman.

But she, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.

Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern, Innocent Adultery.

In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE. n. s. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' the field. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden, Juv.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts, Logick.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

JA'DERY.* n. s. [from jade.] Jadish tricks.

Seeks all foul means
Of boisterous and rought jadery, to disseat
His lord that kept it bravely.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

JA'DISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as an horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras.
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAG.† v. a. [gagau, slits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

To avaunce your flesh, you cut and jagge your clothes.
Old Morality of Lusty Juventus, (temp. Edw. VI.)

To what end doe we jagge and gash the garments, that are sewed together to cover our bodies?
Transl. of Bullinger's Serm. p. 239.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains.
Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAG. n. s. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

JA'GGEDNESS. n. s. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacham on Drawing.

JA'GGY. adj. [from jag.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.
Amid those angles, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomson.

JAIL.† n. s. [geol, Welsh: geole, or rather gaiole, Fr. gieol, Su. Goth. But see GAOL.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. It is written either gaol or jail, but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakspeare.

A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail.
Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.
One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JA'ILBIRD. n. s. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JA'ILER. n. s. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailors. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden, Æn.
Palamon, the prisoner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;
And, with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology. Dr. Johnson.—From the Lat. cacare; Sax. cac-hure, a privy. Minsheu, Skinner, and Lye.—Or, perhaps, from the Lat. jacio, jactus, thrown into, cast into.] A privy; a little house accommodated with a place to receive the excrements; "a common draught." Huloet. Dr. Johnson's examples of this word exhibit it as a noun having the plural number only; but it was used in the singular, having the same form.

Such therefore is this house;—and not this jakes, built upon men's traditions with mouldy and rotten wood.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 200.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

From thence, as from an infernal jakes, do issue the most infamous vices, and execrable actions that can be committed by men. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 141.

Their sordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden, Juv.

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JA'LAP. n. s. [jalap, Fr. jalapium, low Lat.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy, and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative where serous humours are to be evacuated. Hill, Mat. Med.

JAM.† n. s. [I know not whence derived.]

1. A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

2. A sort of frock for children.

The long muslin dress, usually worn in India, both by Hindoos and Mahomedans, is called janmah; whence the dress well known in England, and worn by children, is usually called a jam. Hodges's Travels, p. 3.

3. A thick bed of stone, which hinders the work of the lead-miners, when they are pursuing the veins of ore. The language of the lead-miners in Mendip. Chambers.

To JAM.* v. a. [I know not the etymology.]

1. To squeeze closely; to enclose any object between two bodies, so as to render it immovable.

2. To render firm by treading, as cattle do the land they are foddered on. North. Grose.

JAMA'ICA *Pepper. See ALLSPICE.

JAMB. n. s. [jambe, Fr. a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the foreside of the chimney jambs. Moxon, Mech. Exer.

JA'MBEUX.* n. s. [Fr. jambes. See GIAMBEUX.] Armour for the legs.

One for his legs and knees provided well,
With jambeux arm'd, and double plates of steel.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

JAMBE'E.* n. s. A name formerly for a fashionable sort of cane.

Sir Timothy, yours is a true jambee; and esquire Empty's only a plain dragon. — This virtuoso has a parcel of jambees now growing in the East Indies. Tatler, No. 142.

IA'MBICK. n. s. [iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

IA'MBICK.* adj. Composed of iambick feet.

Aristotle observes, that the iambick verse in the Greek tongue was the most proper for tragedy; because, at the same time that it lifted up the discourse from prose, it was that which approached nearer to it than any other kind of verse.
Addison, Spect. No. 39.

JANE.* n. s.

1. A coin of Genoa. Skinner. "Dear enough a jane." Chaucer.

I could not give her many a jane. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 58.

2. A kind of fustian; a word still in use. Whether from Genoa, or, as Fuller derives it, from Jan, i. e. Jena, in Saxony, (in his Worthies, under Lancashire,) I am unable to say.

Two yards of jeyne fustiane to lyne a dublet for Mr. John, 20*d.* Talbot Accounts, 1580.

To JA'NGLE.† v. n. [jangler, old Fr. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words. Now a low word; formerly much used by our old writers; and in the sense of to prate, to babble, which Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed.

1. To prate; to talk idly or maliciously.

My son, be thou none of tho
To jangle, and tell tales so. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 3.
Of sundry doutes thus they jangle and trete.
Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

Wife is not in the Scriptures called an impediment or necessary evil, as certain poets and beastly men, who hated women, have foolishly jangled. Transl. of Bullinger's Serm. p. 224.

Whether any have used to commune, jangle, and talk in the church. Articles of Visitation by Abp. Cranmer.

A vain humour he hath in building, bragging, jangling, spending, gaming. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

A jangling noise of words unknown. Milton, P. L.

2. To quarrel; to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

There is no errour which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Ralegh.

To JA'NGLE. v. a. To make to sound untunably.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse ere monkish rhimes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.

JA'NGLE.* n. s. [old Fr. jangle.]

1. Prate; babble.

This sompnour — was ful of jangles, —
And ever enquering upon every thing. Chaucer. Fr. Tale.

2. Discordant sound.

The mad jangle of Matilda's lyre. The Mæviad.

JA'NGLER.† n. s. [from the verb; old Fr. jangleur.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow; a prater.

A tongue cutteth friendship all atwo:
A jangler is to God abhominable. Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.

News-carriers, janglers, and such like idle companions.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

JAN'GLING.* n. s. [from jangle.]

1. Babble; mere prate.

The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned; from which some having swerved, have turned aside unto vain jangling, [ματαιολογία, vain discourse,] desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. 1 Tim. i. 6.

2. Dispute; altercation; quarrel.

So far am I glad it did so sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakspeare.

They lose their respect towards us from this jangling of ours.
Guardian, No. 73.

JA'NITOR.* n. s. [Latin.] A door-keeper; a porter.

The janitor of the starry hall drove away slumbers.
Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

JA'NIZARY.† n. s. [A Turkish word. "Janizar apud Turcas significat novum ordinem. Nam Jani est novum, et Zar ordo; ideò autem dictus ordo ille NOVUS, quia illum ultimum Turcæ invenerunt. Alii Janizaros dictos volunt, quasi janitores, quia semper proximi sunt ad Imperatorem, certè proximiores aliis." Critopuli Emendat. et Animadv. in Meursii Gloss. p. 26.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizier, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standard's lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

Next follow his best footmen, called janizaries, taken young from their Christian parents, (parallel to the Roman prætorian soldiers,) being the guard of the grand signior's person.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 283.

JANIZA'RIAN.* adj. [from janizary.] Of the command or government of janizaries.

I never shall so far injure the janizarian republick of Algiers, as to put it in comparison for every sort of crime, turpitude, and oppression, with the jacobin republick of Paris.
Burke on a Regicide Peace.

JA'NNOCK. n. s. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat bread. A northern word.

JA'NSENISM.* n. s. The doctrine of Cornelius Jansen, bishop of Ypres, in Flanders; which made no great noise in the world till after the death of its author in 1638. It related chiefly to grace and freewill. To his work, which was published after his death, he had been induced by the controversy at the beginning of the seventeenth century, between the Jesuits and Dominicans, concerning the nature and necessity of divine grace.

JA'NSENIST.* n. s. One who espouses the opinions of Jansen.

He was a Jansenist: he hated the Jesuits. Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, an. 1671.

JA'NTY.† adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — But see GENT. Such also is the Teut. jent, pretty. Dr. Jamieson has observed, that Bailey gives what seems the proper sense of this word, viz. "romping, wanton;" and he barely notices Dr. Johnson's definition of "showy, fluttering." Append. to his Etym. Dict. But Dr. Johnson is right; and Bailey's sense must be sought elsewhere than in our authors of note. I confirm Dr. Johnson's sense by four examples, to which "romping and wanton" can have no claim.] Showy; fluttering; finical.

Not every one that brings from beyond seas a new gin, or other janty device, is therefore a philosopher. Hobbes Considered, (1662.)

This sort of woman is a janty slattern; she hangs on her clothes, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spectator.

Such janty scribblers are justly laughed at for their sonnets on Phillis and Chloris, and fantastical descriptions in them. Tatler, No. 9.

A janty limp is the present beauty. Tatler, No. 77.

What though they dress so fine and janty? Warton, Oxf. Newsm. Verses, (1760.)

JA'NTINESS. n. s. [from janty.] Airiness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntiness of air I was once master of. Addison, Spect.

JA'NUARY. n. s. [Januarius, Lat.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was, among the Romans, consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peacham.

JAPA'N. n. s. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire
Among these generous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new japanning art. Gay, Trivia.

JAPA'NNER. n. s. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes Pope, Horace.

To JAPE.* v. n. [Icel. geipa, to utter foolish or light words; to jest: allied to the verb gibe, old Fr. gaber. Lye deduces it from the Armor. goap, irrisio, goapat, irridere; whence, he adds, the Fr. gaber.] To jest. Obsolete.

To japen he began. Chaucer, Prol. to Sir Thopas.

To JAPE.* v. a.

1. To cheat; to impose upon. [Sax. geap, cunning, crafty.

Thus hath he japed thee ful many a yere. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. To sport with; to wanton with. In both senses obsolete.

JAPE.* n. s. [Icel. geip.] A jest; a trick. Obsolete.

He had a jape of malice in the dark. Chaucer, Coke's Prol.

JA'PER.* n. s. [from jape.] A jester; a buffoon. Obsolete.

After this cometh the sinne of japers, that ben the devils apes. Chaucer, Pers. Tale.

They ben but jugglers and japers. P. Ploughman's Creed.

To JAR.† v. n. [from eoppe, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untunably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shakspeare, K. Lear.
I perceive you delight not in musick.
— Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakspeare.
A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscommon.
He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid a jarring world. Thomson, Summer.

3. To strike or vibrate regularly; to repeat the same sound or noise.

My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

The owl shrieking, the toads croaking, the minutes jerring, and the clock striking twelve. Kyd, Spanish Trag. (1601.)

He hears no waking clocke, nor watch to jarre. Heywood, Troja Britann. iv. 107. (1609.)

4. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakspeare.
For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton, P. L.
Venalus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible. Dryden, Æn.

5. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

To JAR.* v. a.

1. To make to jar, or sound untunably.

When once they [bells] jar and check each other, either jangling together, or striking preposterously, how harsh and unpleasing is that noise? Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 80.

2. To shake; to agitate.

JAR. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Harsh sound; discord.

Harsh ill-sounding jars
Of clamorous sin, that all our musick mars.
Milton, at a Solemn Musick, (MS. reading.)

3. A repetition of the noise made by the pendulum of a clock. See the third sense of the verb.

I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind
What lady she her lord. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

4. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are! Spenser, F. Q.

Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Force would be right; or rather right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakspeare.

5. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened; that is, on the turn; gyrus, Lat. a turning about; ȝyꞃan, Sax. to turn.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

6. An earthen vessel. [Spanish, jarro; Ital. giarro.]

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

To JA'RBLE.* v. a. To bemire. A northern word. Dr. Johnson says it is jable. See To JAVEL. The Yorkshire Glossary, and the still more northern pronunciation in Cumberland, jarble.

JA'RDES. n. s. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time, will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

To JA'RGLE.* v. n. [Su. Goth. jerga.] To emit a shrill or harsh sound.

Oh, Hercules! ———
Thy mother could for thee thy cradle set
Her husband's rusty iron corselet;
Whose jargling sound might rock her babe to rest.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

JA'RGON. † n. s. [jargon, Fr. gergon, Ital. Perhaps, as Serenius observes, from the Su. Goth. jerga, "eadem oberrare chorda." Formerly we had the verb in the sense of prate or chatter; and I find no occurrence of the substantive so early as that of the verb in the following lines from Gower's fifth book of his Confessio Amantis:

"Whan he thiꝛ tongue refte,
"A littell part thereof he lefte;
"But she withall no worde maie sowne,
"But chitre, and as a byrde jargowne."

The French have the verb jargonner.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bp. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shews
That all his predecessors' rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JARGONE'LLE. n. s. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JA'RRING.* n. s. [from jar.] Quarrel; dispute.

Polygamy occasions perpetual jarrings, and jealousies.
Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 113.

JA'SHAWK. n. s. [probably ias or eyas hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JA'SMINE. n. s. [gelsiminum; jasmin, French. It is often pronounced jessamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou like the harmless bee, mayst freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JA'SMINE Persian. n. s. A plant. A species of lilac.

JASP. † } n. s. [jaspe, Fr. iaspis, Lat.] A hard stone
JA'SPER. } of a bright, beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China.
Hill, Mat. Med.

The floor of jasp and emeraude was dight.
Spenser, Vis. of Bellay.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow, and white. Woodward, Met. Foss.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the Vatican library. Addison on Italy.

IATROLE'PTICK. adj. [iatraleptique, Fr. ἰαλρὸς and ἀλείφω, Gr.] That which cures by anointing.

To JA'VEL, or JA'BLE. † v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties. Dr. Johnson. — To jarble, as I before observed, is our northern word. Nevertheless, jable, in our old language, is found for javel. See the substantive. Of its etymology I am ignorant.

JA'VEL. † n. s. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.

What, thu jabell, canst not have to do?
Thu and thi company shall not depart,
Tyll of our distavys ye have take part.
Mystery of Candlemas-Day, (1512.)

When as Time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying, That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says Sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit?
More, Life of Sir Tho. More.

JA'VELIN. n. s. [javeline, Fr.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milton, P. L.

She shakes her myrtle javelin; and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden, Æn.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addison, Cato.

JAUM.* n. s. The language of carpenters, and also of our northern counties, for jamb. See JAMB. It was formerly written jaumb.

To JAUNCE.* v. n. [Fr. jancer, "to jaunt, an old word." Cotgrave.] To bustle about; to jaunt. This is the true reading in the following passage, which Dr. Johnson has converted into jaunting, and affixed as an authority to jaunt.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd by jauncing Bolingbroke.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

JA'UNDICE. n. s. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood: and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.
The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT.† v. n. [originally jaunce; Fr. jancer, an old word. See To JAUNCE.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

O, my back, my back!
Beshrew your heart for sending me about,
To catch my death with jaunting up and down.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

JAUNT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his aery jaunt, though hurried sore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton, P. R.
He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras.
They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden, Span. Friar.
Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

2. The felloc of a wheel. [Fr. jante.]

JA'UNTINESS. See JANTINESS.

JA'UNTY.* See JANTY.

JAW.† n. s. [joue, a cheek, Fr. whence jowbone, or cheekbone, then jaw. Dr. Johnson.—This word, it must be observed, was formerly written chaw. "The chaw bone. The chawes." Barret's Alv. 1580. The etymon of the verb chaw will therefore, perhaps, be more satisfactory. See To CHAW. Serenius notices the Sax. ȝeaȝl, mandibula, maxilla; and the Icel. jagl, dens molaris.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives to devour the poor. Prov. xxx. 14.
The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable. Walton, Angler.
Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, saith, that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable. Grew, Museum.
More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden, Æn.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Psalm xxii. 15.
My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shakspeare.
A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my labouring frame. Rowe.

3. In low language, gross abuse.

To JAW.* v. a. In low language, to abuse grossly; used also in Scotland, "to assault one with coarse raillery." Dr. Jamieson.

JA'WED.* adj. [from jaw.] Denoting the appearance of the jaws.

Jawed like a jetty. Skelton, Poems, p. 124.

JA'WFALL.* n. s. [jaw and fall.] Depression of the jaw; figuratively, depression of mind or spirits. So CHAP-FALLEN.

We find the Jews—desperately sick of this vertiginous disease; for they had their dukes, or leaders;—and for a time they had an inter-regnum, and no king in Israel, beside divers other horrid jawfalls in government.
Dr. M. Griffith, Fear of God and the King, (1660,) p. 81.

To JAWN.* v. n. [See CHAUN, and To CHAUN.] To open.

Stop his jawning chaps.
Marston, Scourge of Vill. i. 3. (1599.)

JA'WY.* adj. [from jaw.] Relating to the jaws.

The dewlaps and the jawy part of the face
Gayton on D. Quix. p. 42.

JAY.† n. s. [named from his cry. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson.—The bird has much the same name in other languages; gay, gaey, old Teut. gay, geay, Fr. kaa, Dan. "The jay, that chattering bird, which has found its way into so many languages, is nothing but the jaw; and it might easily be proved, that all its various names are derived from this idea." Whiter, Etymolog. Mag. p. 192. Isidore supposes the Latin name of this bird, graculus, to be derived from garrulitas, its prating.] A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp-winged sheers,
Decked with diverse plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Spenser, F. Q.
We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.
Shakspeare.
What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakspeare.
I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings? Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. s. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

I'BIS.* n. s. The name of an Egyptian bird, approaching to the stork-kind.

A certain bird called ibis, about the banks of the Nile, first taught the Egyptians the way of administering clysters; for this bird has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intromitted into the anus, to inject salt-water, as with a syringe, into its own bowels, and thereby to exonerate its paunch when too much obstructed. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 232.

ICE.† n. s. [ıſ, Sax. eyse, Dutch; is, Swed. allied, as Lye thinks, to the Icel. isiaki, large fragments of ice.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Achieve the elder, set the younger free
For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shakspeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peacham on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wise,
At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras.

To ICE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

'Tis chrystal, friend, ic'd in the frozen sea. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eclog. v. 11.

2. To cover with concreted sugar; to cover as with sugar.

Noise, and passion, and hardy confidence, iced over with some sanctimonious pretences, can engage the affections of the vulgar more than ingenuity and real moderation. Puller, Moder. of the Ch. of Eng. Pref. (1679.)

3. To chill; to freeze.

I'CEBUILT.* adj. [ice and build.] Formed of heaps of ice.

Where shaggy forms o'er icebuilt mountains roam. Gray, Progr. of Poesy.

I'CEHOUSE. n. s. [ice and house.] A house in which ice is reposited against the warm months.

I'CELANDER.* n. s. A native of Iceland.

The aspirations of the consonants, so frequent in the English, are the leading marks to a Northern derivation; so that an Icelander, hearing this in the mouth of an Englishman, will go no farther than to his own language, and is sure to find either the same word, or the root of it, with very few alterations. Serenius, Pref. to his Eng. and Sw. Dict.

ICHNE'UMON.† n. s. [ἰχνεύμων, Gr.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

The crocodile—is awed by none more than the ichneumon. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 364.

The ichneumon makes it the whole business of his life to break the eggs of the crocodile. Addison, Spect. No. 126.

ICHNEU'MONFLY. n. s. A sort of fly.

The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects. Derham, Physico-Theol.

ICHNOGRA'PHICAL.* adj. [from ichnography; Fr. ichnographique.] Representing a certain plot of ground.

Perrault has assisted the text with a figure, or ichnographical plot. Evelyn, ii. i. 1.

Here you have the ichnographical plan of the temple of Janus. Drummond, Trav. p. 116.

ICHNO'GRAPHY.† n. s. [ἴχνος and γράφω, Gr. ichnographic, Fr.] A ground-plot.

The inspection alone of those curious ichnographies of temples and palaces. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 268.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the ground-plot or ichnography of every story in a paper by itself. Moxon.

I'CHOR. n. s. [ἰχὼρ, Gr.] A thin watery humour like serum. Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

I'CHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Serous; sanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial sanious or ichorous exulceration. Harvey on Consumptions.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ICHTHYO'LOGY. n. s. [ichthyologie, Fr. ἰχθυολογία, from ἰχθὺς and λέγω, Gr.] The doctrine of the nature of fish.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ICHTHYO'PHAGY. n. s. [ἰχθὺς and φάγω, Gr.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

I'CICLE. n. s. [from ice.] A shoot of ice commonly hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subsiding powder, dried, retains some magnetical virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icicles, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,
Long icicles depend, and crackling sounds are heard. Dryden.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grottos. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

I'CINESS. n. s. [from icy.] The state of generating ice.

I'CING.* n. s. [from ice.] A covering of concreted sugar.

The splendid iceing of an immense historick plumb-cake, was embossed with a delicious basso-relievo of the destruction of Troy. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 492.

I'CKLE.* n. s. In the north of England, an icicle. Grose.

Be she constant, be she fickle,
Be she fire, or be she ickle. Cotton, Joys of Marriage, (1689.)

I'CON. n. s. [εἰκὼν, Gr.] A picture or representation.

Boysardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some of our own nation, and many Netherlanders, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation. Hakewill on Providence.

ICO'NOCLAST.† n. s. [iconoclaste, Fr. εἰκονοκλάστης, Gr.] A breaker of images.

Pope Stephen IV. in 768 condemned this council in a synod of Italian bishops, who asserted the honour of images against the eastern iconoclasts. Young on Idolatrous Corrupt. ii. 275.

ICONOCLA'STICK.* adj. [from iconoclast.] Breaking or destroying images.

I have sometimes reflected for what reason the Turks should appoint such marks [niches in their mosques] to direct their faces towards, in prayer. And if I may be allowed to conjecture, I believe they did it at first in testimony of their iconoclastick principle; and to express to them both the reality of the Divine presence there, and at the same time also its invisibility. Maundrell, Trav. p. 15.

Most of those [statues] at York were destroyed in the first emotion of iconoclastic zeal.
Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

ICONO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [εἰκὼν and γράφω, Gr. iconographie, Fr.] A description of pictures, statues, and similar monuments of ancient art.

ICONO'LATER.* n. s. [εἰκων and λάτρος, Gr. iconolâtre, Fr.] A worshipper of images; a name given by the iconoclasts to the Romanists.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICTHYO'LOGY.* See ICHTHYOLOGY.

I'CY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind. Shakspeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shakspeare, Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractible to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

ICY-PE'ARLED.* adj. Studded with pearls, as it were, of ice.

So mounting up in icy-pearled car,
Through middle empire of the freezing air
He wander'd long. Milton, Death of a Fair Infant.

I'D. Contracted for I would.

IDE'A. n. s. [ideé, Fr. ἰδέα, Gr.] Mental image.

Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the saint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea! Milton, P. L.

If Chaucer, by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set. Dryden.

IDE'AL.† adj. [ideal. Fr. Cotgrave.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

To IDE'ALIZE.* v. n. [from ideal.] To form ideas.

Others attributed it [religion] to meditation and wonder on the beauty and magnificence of nature, or the forebodings and expectations of futurity congenial to man, or their natural propensity to idealize.
Maty, Acc. of Meiner's Hist. of All Religions, (1786.)

IDE'ALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To IDE'ATE.* v. a. [from idea.] To fancy; to form in idea.

Letters mingle souls;
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life: But for these
I could ideate nothing which could please.
Donne to Sir H. Wotton, Poems, p. 146.

What good statesmen would they be, who should ideate or fancy such a commonwealth?
Knott, Charity by Cath. P. 1. ch. 2. in Chillingworth.

IDE'NTICAL. } adj. [identique, Fr.] The same;
IDE'NTICK. } implying the same thing; comprising the same idea.

The beard's th*e identick* beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras.

Their majus is identical with magis. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson, Serm.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley, Serm.

IDE'NTICALLY.* adv. [from identical.] With sameness.

In artificial things the introduction of a new form makes not the matter to be identically different from what it was.
Ross on Sir K. Digby.

IDE'NTICALNESS.* n. s. [from identical.] Sameness.

IDENTIFICA'TION.* n. s. [from To identify.] Production of sameness; proof of identity.

Shep. He may then be able, for aught we know to the contrary, to join the soul or spirit of man to himself.

Deck. Not so as to make but one person of both; such an identification I take to be impossible.

Shep. You make take it to be so; but I am sure you cannot prove it. Skelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. vi.

I am not ready to admit the identification of the Romish faith with Gospel faith. Bp. Watson, Charge.

To IDE'NTIFY.* v. a. [from identick, and the Lat. fio.]

1. To prove sameness.

All indictments must set forth the christian name, surname, and addition of the state and degree, mystery, town, or place, and the county of the offender: and all this to identify his person. Blackstone.

2. To make the same: as, his cause is identified with mine.

IDE'NTITY. n. s. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South, Serm.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES. n. s. [ides, Fr. idus, Lat.] A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakspeare.

IDIO'CRASY. n. s. [idiocrase, Fr. ἴδιος and κρᾶσις, Gr.] Peculiarity of constitution

IDIOCRA'TICAL. adj. [from idiocrasy.] Peculiar in constitution.

I'DIOCY. n. s. [ἰδιωτεία.] Want of understanding.

I stand not upon their idiocy in thinking that horses did eat their bits. Bacon.

I'DIOM. n. s. [idiome, Fr. ἰδίωμα, Gr.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMA'TICAL.† } adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a
IDIOMA'TICK. } tongue; phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanness by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Spectator.

Milton mistakes the idiomatical use and meaning of "munditiæ." Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

IDIO'PATHY.† n. s. [idiopathie, Fr. ἴδιος and πάθος, Gr.]

1. A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Quincy.

2. Peculiar affection or feeling.

Men are so full of their own fancies and idiopathies, that they scarce have the civility to interchange any words with a stranger. More, Song of the Soul, Pref. to P. ii.

An elephant hath his idiopathy, and a man his, at the hearing of a pipe: a cat, and an eagle, at the sight of the sun. More, Song &c. Notes, p. 429.

IDIOSY'NCRASY. n. s. [idiosynacrase, Fr. ἴδιος, σύν, and κρασις, Gr.] A peculiar temper or disposition of body not common to another. Quincy.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties. Glanville, Scepsis.

I'DIOT.† n. s. [idiot, Fr. idiota, Lat. ἰδιώτης, Gr. Dr. Johnson. — The Greek word means originally a private person, and next an illiterate one. "Initio, sapientiæ studium maximam partem tantùm inter magnos viros, publicâ authoritate præditos, versabatur. Unde τοῖς ΠΟΛΙΤΕΥΟΜΕΝΟΙΣ oppositi οἱ ΙΔΙΩΤΑΙ, quia plerique privati indocti ferè sunt." Hornii Hist. Philosophica, lib. 3. cap. 3. So Knatchbull: "Things not understood of them who are but ideots and understand no other than their mother tongue." Annot. on 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Lastly, it came to denote what follows.] A fool: a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them idiots, or base wretches, not able to get relief? Ralegh, Essays.

Who me and my calamities deride. Sandys.

Many idiots will believe that they see what they only hear. Dennis.

IDIO'TICAL.* } adj. [from idiot.]
IDIO'TICK. }

1. Plain; familiar; not learned.

The language of the sublimest authors of Greece is, upon occasion, idiotical and vulgar. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 271.

2. Stupid; foolish.

The stupid succession persisted to the last, in maintaining that the sun, moon, and stars, were no bigger than they appear to the eye; and other such idiotic stuff, against mathematical demonstration. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 49.

I'DIOTCY.* See IDIOCY.

I'DIOTISM.† n. s. [idiotisme, Fr. ἰδιωτισμός, Gr.]

1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language.

It is the manner of that exquisite edition to set all the idiotisms of either language, and divers readings, in the margin. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 139.

Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiotisms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

We may have lost some of the idiotism of that language, in which it was spoken. Dryden, Life of Plutarch.

2. Folly; natural imbecillity of mind.

The wisdom of this world is idiotism;
Strength a week reed. Decker, Com. of Old Fortunatus.

To come to the knowledge of his own stolidity, idiotism, and gullishness. Tr. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 97.

The running that adventure is the greatest idiotism, the most deplorable, woeful simplicity in the world. Hammond, Works, iv. 578.

If he should fall into absolute idiotism, and have no will, he must then be no person. Skelton, Deism Rev. Dial. vi.

It matters not whether our good-humour be construed by others into insensibility, or even idiotism; it is happiness to ourselves; and none but a fool would measure his satisfaction by what the world thinks of it. Goldsmith, Ess. iii.

To I'DIOTIZE.* v. n. [from idiot.] To become stupid.

It looks as if the heads of the greatest men idiotized, when they meet together. Persian Letters, L. 109.

I'DLE.† adj. [ydel, idel, Sax. Mr. H. Tooke considers it as the past participle of aidlian, irritum facere. The German eitel, in the sense of vain, useless, it may be added, is an old word. Such is our early usage of idle. "Feith without werkis is ydel." Wicliffe. St. James, ii. 20. "In idel," i. e. in vain. Chaucer.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour.

The tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, you shall lay upon them; you shall not diminish aught thereof; for they be idle. Exod. iv. 8.

For shame, so much to do, and yet idle. Bull.

2. Not engaged; affording leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shakspeare.

3. Unactive; not employed.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. St. Matt. xx. 6.

No war or battle's sound
Was heard the world around,
The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that, in a tempest, will rather perish than work; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton, P. L.
And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.
Where was then
The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?
Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden, Span. Friar.

5. Unfruitful; barren: not productive of good.

Of antres vast, and desarts idle,
It was my hint to speak. Shakspeare, Othello.
The murmuring surge,
That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
A poor and idle sin. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use? Spenser, F. Q.

This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

He wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers.

To IDLE.† v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To lose time in laziness and inactivity.

These did no hurt, were sober, but went idleing about the grove with their hands in their pocketts, and telling the number of the trees there. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 429.

Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.

2. To play lightly.

A lover may bestride the gossomers
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

To I'DLE.* v. a. To waste idly; to consume unprofitably.

If you have but an hour, will you improve that hour instead of idling it away? Ld. Chesterfield.

IDLEHE'ADED. adj. [idle and head.]

1. Foolish; unreasonable.

These idleheaded seekers resorted thither. Carew.

2. Delirious; infatuated.

Upon this loss she fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.

I'DLELY.* adv. [Sax. ıdelıce.] So our ancestors wrote idly. See several examples in IDLY.

I'DLENESS.† n. s. [from idle. Sax. ıdelneſſe. Not very often found in the plural; at least not an instance occurs in Dr. Johnson's examples. Thomson uses it.]

1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.

Nor is excess the only thing by which sin breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South, Serm.

2. Absence of employment.

All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for spight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden, Ovid.

Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Ralegh.

3. Omission of business.

Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

4. Unimportance; trivialness.

To the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
At last these puling idlenesses laid
Aside, frequent and full the dry divan
Close in firm circle, and set ardent in
For serious drinking. Thomson, Autumn.

5. Inefficacy; uselessness.

6. Barrenness; worthlessness.

Either to have it sterile with idleness, or manured with industry. Shakspeare, Othello.

7. Unreasonableness; want of judgement; foolishness; madness.

There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon, War with Spain.

IDLEPA'TED.* adj [idle and pate.] Idleheaded; stupid.

Let him be found never so idlepated, he is still a grave drunkard. Overbury, Charact. sign. O. 3.

I'DLER. n. s. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.

Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Ralegh.

Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.

I'DLESBY.* n. s. [from idle.] An inactive or lazy person.

I know not whether among those "nihil agentes," idlesbys, or "malè agentes," ill spenders of their time, I should place the newsmonger, and amorous trifler, that spendeth his forenoons on his glass and barber. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 301.

I'DLY.† adv. [from idle. Sax. ıdelıce.]

1. Lazily; without employment.

A yong jentleman, or a yong maide, that liveth welthily and idlely. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.

To rave or speak idlely in sickness. Barret, Alv.

He hath idlely gone about the bush a little. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clerg. p. 161.

And modern Asgil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.

3. Carelessly; without attention.

In a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.
But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.

4. Ineffectually; vainly.

Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

I'DOL. n. s. [idole, Fr. εἴδωλον, idolum, Lat.]

1. An image worshipped as God.

They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.

A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton, P. L.

The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.

2. A counterfeit.

Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zech. ii. 17.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Spenser, F. Q.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldier's god, and people's idol. Denham, Sophy.

IDO'LATER.† n. s. [idolatre, Fr. idololatra, Lat.]

1. One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker,

An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley, Serm.

2. Simply, an adorer; a great admirer.

Jonson was an idolater of the ancients. Hurd.

IDO'LATRESS.* n. s. [from idolater.] She who worships idols.

They would not treat, unless he first acknowledged his father to be a tyrant, and his mother an idolatress. Howell, Lett. iv. 43.

Whose heart, though large,
Beguil'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Milton, P. L.

IDOLA'TRICAL.* adj. [from idolatry.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry.

We have in our church no publique worshipping of idols, no heathenish or idolatrical sacrifice. Bp. Hoper, Exam. as to Apparel, sign. xxx. 4.

To IDO'LATRIZE.† v. a. [from idolater.]

1. To worship idols. Ainsworth.

2. To adore.

Apollo easily perceived, that Lipsius did manifestly idolatrize Tacitus. Tr. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 17.

To IDO'LATRIZE.* v. n. To offer idolatrous worship.

How should either swearing, or blaspheming, or idolatrizing, be sin, if there were not a God, against whom they were committed? Fotherby, Atheom. p. 41.

And as the Persians did idolatrize
Unto the sun. Browne, Brit. Past. i. 1.

Succeeding ages would idolatrize,
And as his numbers, so his reliques prize.
Valentine on the Death of Donne.

IDO'LATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peacham on Drawing.

IDO'LATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.

IDO'LATRY. n. s. [idolatrie, Fr. idololatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worship'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shakspeare.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. South.

The kings were distinguished by judgements or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison, Spect.

I'DOLISH.* adj. [from idol.] Idolatrous.

They have stuffed their idolish temples with the wasteful pillage of your estates. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

I'DOLISM.* n. s. [from idol.] Idolatrous worship; defence of idolatrous worship.

How wilt thou reason with them, how refute
Their idolisms, traditions, paradoxes? Milton, P. R.

I'DOLIST. n. s. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.

I to God have brought
Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists. Milton, S. A.

To I'DOLIZE.† v. a. [from idol.]

1. To worship idolatrously.

The reason Theodoret assigns for God's changing the diet of men from the fruits of the earth to the flesh of animals is, that, foreknowing they would idolize his creatures, he might aggravate the absurdity, and make it the more ridiculous to do so, by their consuming at their tables what they sacrificed to at their altars. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 246.

2. To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denham.

Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

I'DOLIZER.* n. s. [from idolize.] One who loves or reverences to adoration.

The idolizers of monarchy, with equal flattery, have attributed the same prerogative to temporal princes. Mannyngham, Disc. (1681,) p. 132.

Though I be not such an idolizer of antiquity as Harris, yet they have great charms for me. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 38.

I'DOLOUS.* adj. [from idol.] Idolatrous. Obsolete.

Was not this, thinke you, good wholsom counsel of this idolous byshop? Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. P. i. fol. 90. b.

IDO'NEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Lat.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void "de jure & facto," and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayliffe.

I'DYL. n. s. [εἰδύλλιον, Gr. idyllium, Lat.] A small short poem.

I. E. for id est, or, that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JE'ALOUS. adj. [jaloux, Fr.]

1. Suspicious in love.

To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't. Shakspeare, Othello.

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! Shakspeare.

A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. Emulous; full of competition.

I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings, xix. 10.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor. ii. 2.

His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon, Hen. VII.

They, jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
Protesting fate supreme. Milton, P. L.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's? Dec. of Piety.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.

While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

JE'ALOUSNESS. n. s. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.

JE'ALOUSY.† n. s. [jealousie, Fr. from jealous.]

1. Suspicion in love.

But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Spenser, F. Q.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embrac'd despair;
And shuddering fear, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thine extasy. Shakspeare.

Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy? Shakspeare, Cymb.

Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

O how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Jealousy is the fear or apprehension of superiority. Shenstone.

To JEER.† v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things. Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.

A jeering reprover is like a jeering judge, than which there cannot be imagined, either in nature or manners, a thing more odious and intolerable. South, Serm. vii. 150.

To JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.

My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howel, Eng. Tears.

JEER. n. s. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.

Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.

They tipt the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say — she wants it here;
She may be handsome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JE'ERER.† n. s. [from jeer.] A scoffer; a scorner; a mocker.

They are the jeerers, mocking, flouting Jacks. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

This would be brave matter
Unto the jeerers. Ibid.

There you nam'd the famous jeerer. Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

JE'ERING.* n. s. [from jeer.] Mockery.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

JE'ERINGLY. adv. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.

He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are refracted? Derham.

JE'GGET. n. s. A kind of sausage. Ainsworth.

JEHO'VAH.† n. s. The proper name of God in the Hebrew language.

I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the Name of God Almighty, but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them. Exod. vi. 3.

Jehovah, who in one night, when he pass'd
From Egypt marching, equall'd with one stroke
Both her first-born and all her bleating gods. Milton, P. L.

JEJU'NE. adj. [jejunus, Lat.]

1. Wanting; empty; vacant.

Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet melteth without much difficulty: the melting sheweth that it is not jejune, or scarce in spirit. Bacon.

2. Hungry; not saturated.

In gross and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not in jejune or limped water. Brown.

3. Dry; unaffecting; deficient in matter.

You may look upon an inquiry made up of meer narratives, as somewhat jejune. Boyle.

JEJU'NENESS. n. s. [from jejune.]

1. Penury; poverty.

Causes of fixation are, the even spreading both parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits. Bacon.

2. Dryness; want of matter that can engage the attention.

JEJU'NITY.* n. s. [Lat. jejunitas.] Barrenness or dryness of style. Cockeram.

Pray extend your Spartan jejunity to the length of a competent letter. Bentley, Lett. p. 261.

JE'LLIED. adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a state of viscosity.

The kiss that sips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.

JE'LLY. n. s. [gelatinum, Lat. See GELLY, which is the proper orthography.]

1. Any thing brought to a state of glutinousness and viscosity.

They, distill'd
Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the gelly.

The desert came on, and jellies brought. King.

That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing;
Pray dip your whiskers. Pope, Sat. of Horace.

JE'LLY-BAG.* n. s. A bag through which gelly is distilled.

An epigram, if smart and good,
In all its circumstances shou'd
Be like a jelly-bag: —
Make it at top both wide and fit,
To hold a budget-full of wit,
And point it at the end. Student, i. 76. (1750.)

JE'MMINESS.* n. s. [from jemmy.] Spruceness. A colloquial expression; not used in serious writing.

JE'MMY.* adj. [perhaps from gimp; or from gimcrack, in the sense of a smart fellow. See GIMP, and GIMCRACK.] Spruce. A low word.

To this race of words I must refer our vulgar term jemmy; a jemmy fellow, &c. and our quaint though familiar phrase gim-crack. Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 359.

Gimm, neatly trimmed; perhaps the new word jemmy should be gimmy. Pegge.

JE'NNETING. n. s. [corrupted from Juneting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste. Mortimer, Husbandry.

JE'NNET. n. s. [See GENET.] A Spanish horse.

The Spanish king presents a jennet,
To shew his love. Prior.

To JE'OPARD.† v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger.

Many one jeopardeth his best joint to maintain himself in sumptuous raiment. Homilies, B. ii.

Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death. Judges, v. 18.

He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Mac.

JE'OPARDER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who puts to hazard. Sherwood.

JE'OPARDOUS.† adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

The jeopardous time is at hand. Bale on the Revel. sign. B. i. b.

Moved or solicited to some jeopardous course. Gataker, Spiritual Watch, p. 98.

JE'OPARDOUSLY.* adv. [from jeopardous.] In danger; dangerously. Huloet.

JE'OPARDY.† n. s. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner, Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — I had made the same remark as Mr. Bagshaw, and Mr. Malone, that this word is rather a corruption of jeu parti; which, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is properly a game in which the chances are exactly even. Hence it came to signify any thing uncertain or hazardous. See also Du Cange in V. JOCUS PARTITUS.] Hazard; danger; peril.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Why stand we in jeopardy every hour? 1 Cor. xv. 30.

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakspeare, K. John.

We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

To JERK.† v. a. [ȝeрæccan, Sax. corrigere. Lye and Dr. Johnson. — Hreckia, Icel. pulsare, or jarke, pes feriens. Serenius.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakspeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up: to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleering buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanville.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis: — neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden, Lett. to Sir R. Howard.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JE'RKER.* n. s. [from jerk.] One who strikes with a quick smart blow; a whipper; a lasher. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JE'RKIN.† n. s. [cyрtelkin, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Dutch, jurk, a frock.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shakspeare.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool? More, Antid. against Atheism.

Imagine an ambassadour presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South, Serm.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin.
And give thy outward fellow a firking. Hudibras.

I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

JE'RKIN. n. s. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth. This should be written gyrkin.

JE'RSEY.† n. s. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.

She doth sit, and stockings knit
Of jarsy and of woollen. Evans's Old Ballads, i. 179.

JERU'SALEM Artichoke. n. s. Sunflower, of which it is a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer, Husbandry.

JESS. n. s. [gect, French; getto, Italian.] A short strap of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hanmer.

If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Shakspeare, Othello.

JE'SSAMINE. n. s. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.

JESSE.* n. s. A large brass candlestick, branched into many sconces, hanging down in the middle of a church or choir; so called from the similitude of the branches, at its invention, to those of the "arbor Jessæ," the branch or genealogical tree of Jesse. Cowel.

Je'ssed.* adj. [from jess.] Having jesses on; an heraldick term.

To* JEST.† v. n. [gesticulor, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—Goth. gys, irrisio. Serenius.]

1. To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclus. viii. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these several councils. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. To play a part in a mask. Obsolete.

As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,
Go I to fight. Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

Jest.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakspeare.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.

When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me? then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shakspeare.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

4. A mask. Obsolete.

He promis'd us in honour of our guest,
To grace our banquet with some pompous jest. Kid, Span. Tragedy.

5. A gest; an action. See Gest.

The jests or acts of princes or captains. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 204.

Je'ster. n. s. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now, as a jester, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A jester, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the First.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

Je'sting.* n. s. [from jest.] Utterance of sarcasms or jests.

Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient. Ephes. v. 4.

Je'sting-stock.* n. s. A laughing-stock; an object of derision.

An ape, quoth she, and jesting-stock
Is man to God in skye,

As oft as he doth trust his wit
Too much, presuming hie. Googe, Zodiake of Life, (1565,) sign. Q. iii.

Je'stingly.* adv. [from jesting.] In jest; with merriment.

If he be unmarried, and sojourn, he never talks with any woman alone, but in the audience of others, and that seldom, and then also in a serious manner, never jestingly or sportfully. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 9.

When his daughter-in-law [Sir Henry Spelman's] returned home from visiting her neighbours, he would always ask her what of antiquity she had heard or observed, and if she brought home no such account, he would chide her, jestingly. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 541.

JE'SUIT.* n. s. [Fr. Jesuite.] One of a religious and learned order, founded by Ignatius Loyola, a Spanish military man, in the sixteenth century; which presumed to take the name of the Society of Jesus. "This society having been erected on purpose to fight the Pope's battles, not with prayers, and tears, and monastick addresses, but with learning, policy, and address; its members are not, by its constitution, bound to have a choir for the performance of divine offices, neither have they one any where: nor are they bound to attend processions; nor to use any of the monastick austerities, which would interrupt their studies, or might render their address less agreeable to all sorts of people; and for that reason the other orders will hardly allow the Jesuits to be monasticks or religious." Dr. Geddes's Tracts, vol. iii. p. 434. edit. 1730. The word, in our language, has been applied to men of great cunning, craft, and deceit; whence the common word jesuitical.

They think it as unsafe to commit religion and liberty to their arbitrating as to a synagogue of Jesuits. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

We justly reproach the Jesuits, who have adapted all Christianity to temporal and political views, for maintaining a position so repugnant to the laws of nature, morality, and religion, that an evil may be committed for the sake of good, which may arise from it. Addison, Freeholder, No. 7.

Je'suited.* adj. [from the noun.] Conforming to the principles of the Jesuits.

Our jesuited papists have a disease that holds them much like this of the beggar. Dr. White, Serm. (1615,) p. 29.

At Rome the pope's nuncio, and her jesuited mother here. Milton, Eiconocl. § 7.

Je'suitess.* n. s. A woman adopting the principles of the Jesuits.

These forward women usurp upon the fashions of their husbands, and will have their faces seen as well as their voices heard; as the Jesuitesses of late time dared both to attempt and practise, till the late restraint of pope Urban curbed and suppressed them. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 237.

Jesui'tical.* } Jesui'tick. } adj. [from jesuit.] Belonging to a Jesuit; denoting a Jesuit; and thence, in our language, equivocating, imposing upon.

The place is so full and clear, that all the miserable and strained evasions of the jesuitical gainsayers cannot elude it. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 276.

Though for fashion's sake called a parliament, yet by a jesuitical sleight not acknowledged, though called so. Milton, Eiconocl. § 13.

The direction of our attention here is but a jesuitical juggle. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

Detesting those jesuitick principles. Dryden.

Jesui'tically.* adv. [from jesuitical.] Craftily.

This is full out as jesuitically contrived, as the other was said and thought to be. Echard, Observ. Answ. Cont. of the Cler. Pref.

JE'SUITISM.* n. s. The principles and doctrine of the Jesuits.

Puritanism — is only reformed Jesuitism, as Jesuitism is nothing else but popish puritanism. South, Serm. v. 219.

JET.† n. s. [ȝaȝat, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Lat. Formerly our word was geat, or jeat. So Barret and Fuller write it.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a fet,
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson, Summer.

2. [Jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet? Tusser, Husbandry.

4. Drift; scope. Get, or jet, was anciently used for fashion; as by Chaucer, and Hoccleve.

The true jet of the argument was to be drawn from precedent. Wyndham.

To JET.† v. n. [jetter, Fr. yta, Icel. exire, trudere; from the Su. Goth. ut, extrà, foras.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakspeare.

The west end yields a right magnificent aspect, by reason of an eminency of land jetting out farther than the rest. Blount, Voyage to the Levant, (1650,) p. 17.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait; "to jette lordly through the streets, that men may see them." Barret.

Another sort jetting up and down, to wayte when my ladie shall be readye to see a cast of their office. Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) sign. G. vi.

Uncomely walking, and jetting up, and down, and overthwart the church. Homilies, B. ii.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Amongst the chastest dames thou jett'st it now,
With honesty stamp'd on thy haughty brow. Fanshaw, Tr. of Past. Fido.

3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, Fr.]

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wiseman.

JE'TSAM. } n. s. [jetter, Fr.] Goods or other
JE'TSON. } things which, having been cast over board in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.

JE'TTEE.* n. s. [Fr. jettee, "a jettie or juttie, a bearing out or leaning over in buildings; also, the bank of a ditch, &c." Cotgrave. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this substantive in any shape. Shakspeare has jutty. See JUTTY. His elder, Skelton, humorously describes a person "jawed like a jetty." Poems, p. 124. And Cotgrave, we see, gives it jettie or juttie. Why the English form should of late have been abandoned for the French, no good reason can be assigned.]

1. A projection of part of any building. See JUTTY.

An out-butting or jettie of a house, that jetties out farther than any other part of the house. Florio, in V. Sporto, Ital. Dict. (1598.)

2. A kind of pier; a mole projected into the sea.

A curious harbour, formed by three stone jetties, carried out a good way into the sea. Smollet.

They found the demolition at Dunkirk entirely at a stand; instead of demolition, they found construction; for the French were then at work on the repair of the jettees. Burke, Obs. on the State of the Nat. (1769.)

Some jettees and piers of defence, ill placed, had been made. Pref. to Smeaton's Reports, (1797.)

JE'TTER.* n. s. [from To jet.] A spruce fellow; one who struts. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JE'TTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.
2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bowers below. Pope.

To JE'TTY.* v. n. [Fr. jetter.] To jut. See JETTEE.

An out-butting — of a house, that jetties out farther than any other part of the house. Florio, Ital. Dict. (1598.)

JEW.* n. s. [from Judah.] An Hebrew; an Israelite. "Since their return from the Babylonian captivity, they lost, in great measure, the name of Israelites, and were called Jews, from Judah, their principal tribe, which made up the chief of the captives in Babylon, and consequently of those who returned from thence." Collyer, Sacred Interpr. vol. i. ch. 16.

The learned Chrysostome, in a sermon against the Jews, tells them this fact [the vain attempt to rebuild the temple] was then fresh in the memories even of their young men, that it happened but twenty years ago, and that it was attested by all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, where they might still see the marks of it in the rubbish of that work, from which the Jews desisted in so great a fright, and which even Julian had not the courage to carry on. This fact, which is in itself so miraculous, and so indisputable, brought over many of the Jews to Christianity; and shews us, that after our Saviour's prophecy against it, the temple could not be preserved from the plough passing over it, by all the care of Titus, who would fain have prevented its destruction, and that instead of being re-edified by Julian, all his endeavours towards it did but still more literally accomplish our Saviour's prediction, that not one stone should be left upon another. Addison on the Chr. Rel. § 8.

As rich as a JEW.* A proverbial phrase.

We are apt to say, in a proverbial way, as rich as a Jew; but the Jews, take them in general, are not a rich people. There have been always some few among them that were immensely wealthy, and it was from the observation of these few that the proverb arose. Pegge, Anonym. v. 20.

JE'WEL. n. s. [joyaux, Fr. jeweelen, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakspeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.
Shakspeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world; a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters.
— Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. s. The place where the regal ornaments are reposited.

The king has made him master of the jewel-house.
Shakspeare.

To JE'WEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To dress or adorn with jewels.

You are as well jewell'd as any of them: your ruff and linen about you is much more pure than theirs.
B. Jonson, Poetaster.

JE'WEL-LIKE.* adj. [jewel and like.] Brilliant as a jewel.

Her eyes as jewel-like,
And cas'd as richly. Shakspeare, Pericles.

JE'WELLER. n. s. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsick worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

JE'WESS.* n. s. [from Jew.] An Hebrew woman.

Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess.
Acts, xxiv. 24.

There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Jewess' eye. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

JE'WISH.* adj. Denoting a Jew; relating to the Jews.

Not giving heed to Jewish fables. Tit. i. 14.

It was customary with the Jews to be called by a Jewish name among their own countrymen, and by another among the Gentiles. Hence we find Thomas called Didymus, St. John, xi. 16., and Tabitha called Dorcas, Acts, ix. 36., and Saul had the Roman name of Paul. Collyer, Sacr. Interpreter.

JE'WISHLY.* adv. [from Jewish.] In a Jewish manner.

And howsoe'er French kings most Christian be,
Their crowns are circumcis'd most Jewishly.
Donne, Poems, p. 86.

JE'WISHNESS.* n. s. [from Jewish.] The religious rites of the Jews.

These faithlesse fonde newe-fanglers would bring us again from the fayth unto paganisme, and unto the old Jewishness.
Martin, Marr. of Pr. (1554,) sign. L. iii. b.

JE'WRY.* n. s.

1. Judea.

In Jewry is God known. Ps. lxxvi. 1

2. A district inhabited by Jews; whence probably the street so called in London. The word is very old in this sense.

There was in Asie, in a great citee,
Amonges Christen folke a jewerie. Chaucer, Prior. Tale.

JEWS-EAR.† n. s. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — "The arbor Judæ is thought to be that whereon Judas hanged himself, and not upon the elder tree as it is vulgarly said. Gerardes Herbal, edit. Johnson, p. 1428. I am clear that the mushrooms or excrescencies of the elder tree, called auriculæ Judæ in Latin, and commonly rendered Jews' ears, ought to be translated Judas' ears from the popular superstition above mentioned." Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 587. n.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill, Mat. Med.

An herb called jews-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes ashes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

JEWS-HARP.† n. s. [The Jews-trump, or, as it is more generally pronounced, the Jew-trump, seems to take its name from the nation of the Jews, and is vulgarly believed to be one of their instruments of musick. — But, upon enquiry, you will not find any such musical instrument as this described by the authors that treat of the Jewish musick. In short, this instrument is a mere boy's play-thing, and incapable in itself of being joined either with a voice or any other instrument; and I conceive the present orthography to be a corruption of the French jeutrump, a trump to play with. And in th Belgick, or Low-Dutch, from whence come many of our toys, a trump is a rattle for children. Sometimes they will call it a Jews-harp; and another etymon given of it is Jaws-harp, because the place where it is played upon is between the jaws! Pegge, Anonym. i. 82.] A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEWS-MALLOW. n. s. [corchorus, Latin.] Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEWS-STONE. n. s. An extraneous fossil, being the clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky redishness. It is found in Syria.
Hill, Mat. Med.

JEWS-TRUMP.* See JEWS-HARP.

As playing on a gittern, or a jews-trump.
Beaum. and Fl. Lov. Progress.

JE'ZEBEL.* n. s. Formerly employed to denote a forward, impertinent woman; and perhaps not yet wholly disused.

You are to know, sir, that a jezebel (so called by the neighbourhood from displaying her pernicious charms at her window) has a thousand little tricks, and fooleries, to attract the eyes of all the idle young fellows in the neighbourhood. Spectator, No. 175.

Having myself observed a nest of jezebels near the temple, who make it their diversion to draw up the eyes of young templars, that at the same time they may see them stumble in an unlucky gutter which runs under the window. Ibid.

IF.† conjunction. [ᵹıꝼ; Saxon; the imperative of the Goth. gifan and Sax. ᵹıꝼan, to give, to concede, to allow. Skinner and Ray have preceded, in this deduction at least from the Saxon, Mr. Horne Tooke; who, however, has abundantly illustrated it by examples from our ancient writers, who used gif and yef, where we now employ if as well as the verb give, the word that being generally understood or implied in the former case; and then the meaning being, "allow that, grant that, the thing be so:" which senses we annex to give. God gif, God grant that; a very old expression. Yet it may not be omitted, that if has existence in the Gothick language without the deduction named by Mr. Tooke, or the possibility of such deduction, as noticed by Dr. Jamieson under the Scottish gif. The old word is gau, and jabai; to the former the Sax. ᵹu, if, corresponds. These have no connection with the word give. Mr. Tooke should have shewn why there was none. The Icelandick if is also the hypothetical particle; which, as well as the Goth. conjunctions, Serenius, and Ihre connect with the Su. Goth. jef, doubt, exception. I shall not say with Mr. Callander, that "to derive if from gif, as some writers have done, is ridiculous;" yet I would not overpass the pretensions of if as a radical word.]

1. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs, or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
— If! talk'st thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakspeare.

Thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath, if that thou hearken unto the commandment of the Lord thy God. Deut. xxviii. 14.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope, Statius.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rise they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't — it may be — and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

4. Though. Not usual.

They themselves decreed
Their own revolt, not I; if I foreknew,

I'Faith.* adv. [an abbreviation of in faith.] Indeed; truly. See the adverb Faith.

I'faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Then I feague it away i'faith. D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

IGNA'RO.* n. s. [Latin.] A contemptuous term of elder days for a blockhead.

It was intolerable insolence in such ignaroes to challenge this for popery, which they understood not. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 296.

No man can be such an ignaro, as to imagine his sinews to be made of wire, or his body to be immured in brass. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 96.

I'gneous. adj. [igneus, Lat.] Fiery; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanville, Scepsis.

To I'gnify.* v. a. [ignis and fio, Lat.] To form into fire.

The ignified part of matter was formed into the body of the sun. Stukely, Palæogr. Sacra, p. 20.

Igni'fluous.* adj. [ignifluus, Lat.] Flowing with fire. Cockeram.

Igni'potent. adj. [ignis and potens, Lat.] Presiding over fire.

Vulcan is call'd the power ignipotent. Pope, Homer.

I'GNIS FATUUS.† n. s. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lanthorn.

Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton, Opticks.

An ignis fatuus, that bewitches
And leads men into pools and ditches. Hudibras, i. 1.

Scared and guided by the ignis fatuus of popular superstition. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 32.

To I'GNITE.† v. a. [from ignis, fire, Lat.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chymical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew, Museum.

The ignited particles hasten to dip themselves in the neighbouring stream. Sir H. Sheere, in Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 10.

Plato, in his Timæus, enumerating the ignited juices, names wine in the first place. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 212.

To I'gnite.* v. n. To become red hot. A term of chymistry.

Igni'tion. n. s. [ignition, Fr. from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

Igni'tible. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitible parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Igni'vomous. adj. [ignivomus, Lat.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanos and ignivomous mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Derham, Physico-Theol.

Ignobi'lity.* n. s. [Lat. ignobilitas.] Want of magnanimity.

To locke up the gates of true knowledge, from them that affectuously seketh it to the glory of God, is a property belongynge only to the hypocrytysh Pharisees and false lawers. A more signe of ignobylytie can not be sene, then to hyde such noble monumentes. Bale, in Leland's Newe Year's Gift.

IGNO'BLE. adj. [ignoble, Fr. ignobilis, Lat.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

IGNO'BLENESS.* n. s. [from ignoble.] Want of dignity; want of splendour: as, "ignobleness of birth." Ainsworth.

IGNO'BLY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly! Milton, P. L.
Here, over-match'd in fight; in heaps they lie;
There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly. Dryden, Æn.

IGNOMI'NIOUS. adj. [ignominieux, Fr. ignominiosus, Lat.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They, with pale fear surpriz'd,
Fled ignominious. Milton, P. L.
Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryden, Juv.
They gave, and she transferr'd the curs'd advice,
That monarchs should their inward soul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMI'NIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominious.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.

I'GNOMINY. n. s. [ignominie, Fr. ignominia, Lat.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton, P. L.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

I'GNOMY.* n. s. This barbarous abbreviation of ignominy occurs very often in our old authors; and is not merely a poetical licence.

Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave! Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Sprinkling the terms of honour wholly on the one part, and of hatred and ignomy on the other. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

They are paid in their own coin; they are with ignomy repaid reproach. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 286.

IGNORA'MUS.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowel.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstructed pretender. A low word, Dr. Johnson says. — South uses it with good effect, and probably adopted it from the character of Ignoramus in the facetious Latin comedy of that name, first printed in 1630, the keen and admirable satire in which is exactly suitable to South's turn of mind.

If ever you find an ignoramus in place and power, and can have so little conscience and so much confidence as to tell him to his face, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world beside; — I dare undertake, that, as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down, and admit the commendation, though he cannot believe the thing! South, Serm. ii. 335.

As if, forsooth, there could not be so much as a few houses fired, a few ships taken, or any other calamitous accident befall this little corner of the world, but that some apocalyptick ignoramus must presently find and pick it out of some abused, martyred prophecy of Ezekiel, Daniel, or the Revelation. South, Serm. v. 57.

I'GNORANCE. n. s. [ignorance, Fr. ignoratio, Lat.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakspeare.
Still banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Shakspeare.
If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise. Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law. Sherlock.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. C. Pray.
Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tob. iii. 2.

I'GNORANT. adj. [ignorant, Fr. ignorans, Lat.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Ps. lxxiii.
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ign'rant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not
In ignorant concealment. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. Without knowlege of some particular.

Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon, Ess.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I
Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton, P. L.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.

Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.

His shipping,
Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakspeare.

I'GNORANT.† n. s. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed.

Let this dross carry what price it will
With noble ignorants. B. Jonson, Forest.

Look into the private closets of their devout ignorants, what difference shall you find between the image and the suppliant? Bp. Hall, Quo vadis?

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach! Denham.

I'GNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

To IGNO'RE.† v. a. [ignorer, Fr. ignoro, Lat.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received, Dr. Johnson says. Boyle, however, is guiltless of the introduction; for the word occurs in our lexicography long before Boyle wrote. Thus Cotgrave renders the Fr. ignorer "to ignore;" and so Sherwood defines ignore "to be ignorant of." But it is a word not worthy to be used.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern criticks to divers texts, by me alleged. Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNO'SCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Lat.] Capable of pardon. Dict.

IGNO'TE.* adj. [Lat. ignotus.] Unknown. Like ignore, a very pedantick word, and not to be received.

A traveller passing through the confines of ignote countries. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 1.

Shall such very ignote and contemptible pretenders be allowed a place among the most renowned of poetick writers? Phillips, Theatr. Poet. (1675,) Pref.

JIB.* n. s. [In naval language.] The foremost sail of a ship.

To JIB.* v. a. To shift a boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other.

To JIBE.* See To GIBE.

JI'CKAJOG.* n. s. [a cant word, from jog; sometimes pronounced jigjog.] A shake; a push.

An some writer (that I know) had had but the penning o' this matter, he would ha' made you such a jickajog i' the booths, you should ha' thought an earthquake had been i' the Fair. B. Jonson, Barth. Fair, Induct.

JI'FFY.* n. s. [used, as it should seem, in Scotland, seriously; by us, only in ludicrous writing or speaking. Dr. Jamieson considers it as a corruption of gliff.] An instant; a moment.

And then shall each Paddy, who once on the Liffy
Perchance held the helm of some mackarel hoy,
Hold the realm of the state, and dispense in a jiffy
More fishes than ever he caught when a boy! Rejected Addresses.

JIG.† n. s. [giga, Italian; geige, Teut. gige, Dan. and gigia, Icel. a fiddle; and the old Fr. gige, or gigue, "sorte d' instrument de musique à vent." Roquefort. Chaucer uses gigges in the sense of "irregular sounds produced by the wind." Tyrwhitt. The French instrument, borrowed from the northern, is considered by Menage as a sort of fiddle; whence the application of the word to the tune or dance.]

1. A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike musick, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.

All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton, Comus.

The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Fenton.

They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall. Arbuthnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.

2. A ludicrous composition; a ballad; a song. Obsolete.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. B. Jonson.

A worthy story, howsoever writ,
For language, modest mirth, conceit, or wit,
Meets oftentimes with the sweet commendation
Of "hang't, 'tis scurvy!" when for approbation
A jig shall be clapp'd at, and every rhime
Prais'd and applauded by a clamorous chime.
Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn, Prol.

To JIG.† v. n. [from the noun. Old Fr. giguer.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

With earnest endeavour pushed forward to gaming, jigging, wassailing, and mixed dancing. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

As for the jigging part and figures of dances, I count that little. Locke.

JI'G-MAKER.† n. s. [jig and maker.] One who dances or plays merrily; or who writes songs and ballads.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

JI'GGER.* n. s. [from jig.]

1. One that jigs. Ash.

2. In naval language, a machine to hold on the cable, when it is heaved into the ship by the revolution of the windlass. Chambers.

JI'GGISH.* adj. [from jig.] Disposed or suitable to a jig.

She is never sad, and yet not jiggish. Habington's Castara, sign. A. 8.

This man makes on the violin a certain jiggish noise, to which I dance. Spectator, No. 276.

A kit is more jiggish than the fiddle itself, and never sounds but to a dance. Tatler, No. 157.

JI'GGUMBOB. n. s. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras.

JILL.* n. s. This is the old form of writing gill, a contemptuous name for a woman. See the sixth sense of GILL.

Be merry, but with modesty,
Lest some men blame thy honesty:
Let manners thine be pleasant still;
With Jacks yet do not play the Jill.
Kendall, Flowers of Epigrams, (1577)

JILL-FLIRT.* n. s. A giddy, light, or wanton woman. See the sixth sense of GILL.

We are infested with a parcel of jilflirts, who are not capable of being mothers of brave men; for the infant partakes of the temper and disposition of its mother. Guardian, No. 26.

JILT.† n. s. [gilia, Icelandick, to entrap in an amour. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland. Dr. Johnson.—It may be from the Sax. ȝæȝl, ȝal, wanton. See the sixth sense of Gill. For, in the use of gill or jill by our old authors, it is evident, that the word first signified a loose or wanton woman; whence its softened application to her who cheats her lover.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt,
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Otway, Orphan.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

To Jilt. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden, Juv.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

To Jilt. v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceits.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

Ji'mmers.* n. s. Jointed hinges. Bailey. A northern word. Grose. See Gimmer.

Jimp.* adj. Neat; handsome; elegant of shape. See Gimp. Used in Scotland, and in the north of England; and sometimes pronounced jim.

To JI'NGLE.† v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed. Dr. Johnson.—It is the same as to gingle, where see the etymology.] To clink; to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shakspeare.

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awak'd. Shakspeare, Tempest.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

To Ji'ngle.* v. a. To shake so that a shrill noise may be made.

The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

Ji'ngle. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.

2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon, Ess.

Ji'ppo.* n. s. [Fr. juppe.] A waistcoat; a jacket; a kind of stays worn by ladies. This unnoticed word is near enough to the parent French, which has long been absurdly converted into jump. See the third sense of Jump.

Over all this they wear a jippo, not unlike the jippo's worn by the French ladies. Hist. Descript. of the Kingdom of Macasar, (1701,) p. 80.

Ile. n. s. [corrupted from aisle, Fr.] A walk or alley in a church or publick building. Properly aile.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long iles extend. Pope.

Ile. n. s. [aisle, Fr.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.

ILE'US. n. s. [Lat.]

An ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is really either a circumvolution, or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot.

I'LEX. n. s. [Lat.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambletted, as if it were painted. Mortimer.

I'liack. adj. [iliacus, Lat.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliack passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

I'liack Passion. A kind of nervous colick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those, who die of the iliack passion, have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

Ilk.† adj. [elc, Saxon.] The same. It is still retained in Scotland, and the north of England; and denotes each: as, ilk ane of you, every one of you. It also signifies, the same; as, Mackintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Mackintosh of Mackintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yshend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, (who knows not Rosalind?)
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

ILL.† adj. [contracted from evil, and retaining all its senses. Dr. Johnson.—Icel. illr; Sueth. (Kon. Styr.) ill, malus, perversus. Vox antiquissima. Serenius.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See Evil.

There's some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, till the Heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill seat; but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon, Ess.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry. Bacon.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense, Dr. Johnson says. The Teut. evel often denotes disease. See Kilian in V. Evel. This sense of ill is to be referred to ail, which is the Goth. aglo, tribulation; Sax. adl, disease.

You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

Ill. n. s.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden, Juv.
Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate, Juv.
Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Philips.

Ill. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.

Thou desir'st
The punishment all on thyself! alas!
Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton.
Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryden.

Ill, † substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples. Johnson.

When the substantive is compounded, the compound word mostly wants explanation; because the two words, when separated, seldom retain the same meaning, which they have when joined. But this is not the case with compounds of the adverb; they only require explanation, when the sense happens to be altered by the composition. Mason.

Ill. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I have an ill divining soul:
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakspeare.
No look, no last adieu before he went!
In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent. Dryden, Æn.
I know
The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Philips.

The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift, Examiner.

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who, threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me and tell to them my secret. Milton, S. A.
A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope.

Ill. adverb.

There sounded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisd. xviii. 10.

My colleague,
Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. B. Jonson, Catiline.
The examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill beseeming arms. Shakspeare.
Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryden.
We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And every saucy ill bred fellow
Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.

The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Sidney.

Envy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned? It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Collier.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison on the War.

The second daughter was a peevish, froward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With antick vests, which, through their shady fold,
Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden, Virg.
You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill ey'd unto you. Shakspeare, Cymb.
I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison, Cato.
Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life. Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknightly errand. Sidney.

If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed.
—— And you sped, sir?
—— Very ill favouredly. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.

The fabled dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryden, Juv.
Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelt'ring men much better than himself. Addison, Cato.
Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private and the publick rest. Waller.

That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsh.
Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton, P. L.

Nor has he erred above once by ill judged superfluity. Garth, Ovid.

Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Estrange.

The match had been so ill made for Plexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney.

These are the product
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton, P. L.
The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.
He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.

It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaritous, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.

Soon as th' ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.
There motly images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and similies unlike. Pope.
Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts intentive on the bridal day. Pope, Odyssey.
Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.
The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.

There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted: whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Ayliffe.

Ill spirited Wor'ster, did we not send grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakspeare.
From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill starr'd love. Prior.
Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope, Odyssey.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
For death unfinish'd and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden, Ovid.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their playfellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

IL, before words beginning with l, stands for in.

ILLA'CERABLE.* adj. [illacerabilis, Lat.] That cannot be torn. Cockeram.

ILLA'CRYMABLE. adj. [illacrymabilis, Lat.] Incapable of weeping. Dict.

ILLA'PSE.† n. s. [illapsus, Lat.]

1. Gradual emission or entrance of one thing into another.

What ravishing transports now
Seize on that intellect! how doth it glow
With fresh illapses of the purest light!
J. Hall on the Death of Ld. Hastings, Lac. Mus. (1650.)

The prophetick illapses could never grace an impure soul. Spenser on Vulg. Proph. (1665,) p. 40.

As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the illapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire; so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine. Norris.

2. Sudden attack; casual coming.

Life is oft preserved
By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson, Summer.
Passion's fierce illapse
Rouses the mind's whole fabrick.
Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

To ILLA'QUEATE.† v. a. [illaqueo, Lat.] To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare. Cockeram.

I am illaqueated, but not truly captivated into your conclusion. More, Div. Dialogues.

They, that take upon them to be the only absolvers from sin, are themselves held fast in the snares of eternal death; and do as necessarily illaqueate all others therein whom they proselyte to their religion. More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

ILLAQUEA'TION.† n. s. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, or pendulous illaqueation, but also suffocation. Brown.

They wholly gave themselves up to learn to wrangle, and arts of illaqueation. Evelyn to Bp. Nicolson, Nic. Ep. Corr. i. 140.

2. A snare; any thing to catch another; a noose.

ILLA'TION.† n. s. [illatio, Lat.] Inference; conclusion drawn from premises.

Which might be inferred by those, that were rather apt to make evil than good illations of our proceeding.
Bacon, Report in the H. of Com. 5 Jac.

Herein there seems to be a very erroneous illation from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Illation so orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

I'LLATIVE.† adj. [illatus, Lat.] Relating to illation or conclusion.

There is a great deal of difference between a mere illative necessity, which consists only in the logical consequence of one thing upon another, and between a causal necessity, which efficiently and antecedently determines and puts the faculty upon working. South, Serm. viii. 89.

In common discourse or writing such casual particles as for, because, manifest the act of reasoning as well as the illative particles then and therefore. Watts.

I'LLATIVE.* n. s. That which denotes illation or conclusion.

This [word] FOR that leads the text in, is both a relative, and an illative; referring to what he had said in the foregoing words; and inferring a necessary consequence of the one clause upon the other: "Purge out the old leaven; FOR Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 186.

I'LLATIVELY.* adv. [from illative.] By illation or conclusion.

Most commonly taken illatively.
Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 434.

ILLA'UDABLE.† adj. [illaudabilis, Lat.] Unworthy of praise or commendation. This word is not coined by Milton; for it exists in the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar, more than half a century before the publication of Paradise Lost.

Strength from truth divided and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton, P. L.

You, my lord, have, I fear, been awed into a restraint of your genius in that point, by that ill-understood, (or otherwise) ill-grounded, and illaudable maxim of Mr. Pope:
"For fools admire, but men of sense approve."
Delany, Observ. on Ld. Orrery, p. 102.

ILLA'UDABLY. adv. [from illaudable.] Unworthily; without deserving praise.

It is natural for all people to form, not illaudably, too favourable a judgement of their own country. Broome.

ILLE'CEBROUS.* adj. [illecebrosus, Lat.] Full of allurements. Not in use.

Not the illecebrous delectations of Venus, but the valiant acts and noble affairs of princes. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 19.

The study is elegant, and the matter illecebrous, that is to say, swete to the reader. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 120. b.

ILLE'GAL. adj. [in and legalis, Lat.] Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself. Swift.

ILLEGA'LITY.† n. s. [old Fr. illegalité.] Contrariety to law.

To ILLU'DE.† v. a. [illuder, Fr. illudo, Lat.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blow, t'illude him with such bait.
Spenser, F. Q.

If the solitariness of these rocks do not illude me.
Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. iv. 1.

In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
While its circumference, scorning to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought. Prior.

To ILLU'ME. v. a. [illuminer, Fr.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When yon same star, that's westward from the pole
Had made his course, t' illume that part of heav'n,
Where now it burns. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow,
Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach
Betokens. Thomson, Summer.

To ILLU'MINATE. v. a. [illuminer, Fr. lumen, Lat.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe with thy love-kindling light,
To illuminate my dim and dulled eyn. Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Wotton.

He made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of heaven,
To illuminate the earth and rule the night. Milton, P. L.

Reason our guide, what can she more reply
Than that the sun illuminates the sky;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowlege or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sandys, Travels.

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke.

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

5. To illustrate.

My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Watts.

ILLU'MINATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Enlightened.

That famous and truly illuminate doctor, Francis Junius, the glory of Leyden. Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. E. 7.

A precise, pure, illuminate brother! B. Jonson, Fox.

He hath an understanding so illuminate, as he is like to prove the best scholar of all his brethren.
Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 96.

ILLU'MINATE.* n. s. One pretending to be enlightened with superiour knowledge; as certain hereticks of the sixteenth century, called illuminati, affected to be; and as other fanciful persons, the hermetical philosophers, called Rosicrucians, were sometimes denominated. In our own times, we have had illuminati, so calling themselves, assembling, in several parts of Europe, to promote plans against religion and social order; and endeavouring, by every method, to seduce the poor and the ignorant, as well as the rich and learned, into their secret machinations. England soon discovered, that these mock philosophers offered a stone instead of bread, and darkness visible instead of one cheering ray of light. Their execrable labours have been here exposed to detestation and contempt; but Europe yet mourns over the misery and ruin which those labours have occasioned. It is remarkable, that illuminate, as a noun substantive, in our language, is very old in a sense of contempt or reprehension; implying, that those who assumed the name, took too much upon them.

Another pestilent sect there was, not long since, of Illuminati in Arragon, whose founders were a hypocritical crew of their priests; who, affecting in themselves and their followers a certain angelical purity, fell suddenly to the very counterpoint of justifying bestiality. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

These new illuminates have such cogging shifts with them.
Watson, Quodlibets of State, (1602,) p. 44.

Not unlike the refined and quaint illuminates of our time.
Loe, Blisse of Br. Beauty, (1614,) p. 15.

Such illuminates are our classical brethren!
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 16.

ILLUMINA'TI.* [Latin.] See the substantive ILLUMINATE.

ILLUMINA'TION. n. s. [illuminatio, Lat. illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body illightened, and an illumination created. Ralegh, Hist.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,
And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryden, Pers.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work.
Felton on the Classicks.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge or grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetical illumination are inspired. Hooker.

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses. Bacon.

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Sprat, Serm.

ILLU'MINATIVE. adj. [illuminatif, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air. Digby on Bodies.

ILLU'MINATOR.† n. s. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.

Chaucer, writing his poesies in English, is of some called the first illuminator of the English tongue.
Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton.

To ILLU'MINE.† v. a. [illuminer, Fr.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

His understanding was illumined with the beams of divine truth. Price, Prince Henry's Annivers. (1613,) p. 12.

To confirm his words, outflew
Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze
Far round illumin'd hell. Milton, P. L.

What in me is dark,
Illumine! what is low, raise and support! Milton, P. L.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;
O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

ILLU'SION. n. s. [illusio, Latin; illusion, French.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; errour.

That, distill'd by magick flights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,

As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion. Bacon, Hen. VII.

So oft they fell
Into the same illusion; not as man,
Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton, P. L.

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion. Atterbury.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation. Rogers.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.

ILLU'SIVE. adj. [from illusus, Lat.] Deceiving by false show.

The heathen bards, who idle fables drest,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms exprest. Blackmore.

While the fond soul
Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints the illusive form. Thomson, Spring.

ILLU'SIVELY.* adv. [from illusive.] In a deceptious manner.

ILLU'SIVENESS.* n. s. [from illusive.] Deception; false appearance. Ash.

ILLU'SORY. adj. [from in and lusorius, Lat. illusoire, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtilty, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.

To ILLU'STRATE.† v. n. [illustro, Lat. illustrer, Fr.]

1. To brighten with light.

Then let us borrow from the glorious sun
A little light to illustrate this act
More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 7.

Being illustrated by the sun, it [the front of the house] might yield the more graceful aspect. Wotton on Architecture.

2. To brighten with honour.

Matter to me of glory! whom their hate
Illustrates, when they see all regal power
Given me to quell their pride. Milton, P. L.

Thee she enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Philips.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

Authours take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown.

ILLUSTRA'TION. n. s. [illustration, Fr. from illustrate.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Estrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLU'STRATIVE.† adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown.

Purging and pruning with all industry,
What's dead or useless, less demonstrative,
What's dull or flaccid, nought illustrative.
More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 41.

We should suppose this also an additional illustrative note.
Biblioth. Bibl. Oxf. i. 47.

ILLU'STRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

ILLU'STRATOR.* n. s. [Latin; illustrateur, Fr.] One who illustrates, brightens, clears, or beautifies. Cotgrave.

ILLU'STRIOUS.† adj. [illustris, Lat. illustre, Fr.]

1. Bright; shining.

Shaking his illustrious tresses. Sandys, Ovid. B. 2.

His locks behind,
Illustrious on his shoulders fledge with wings,
Lay waving round. Milton, P. L.

2. Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South.

Of every nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryden, Juv.

ILLU'STRIOUSLY. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdained not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterbury.

You carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope.

ILLU'STRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

ILLUXU'RIOUS.* adj. [in and luxurious.] Not luxurious.

The widow Vanhomrigh and her two daughters quitted the illuxurious soil of their native country, for the more elegant pleasures of the English court. Ld. Orrery on Swift, p. 104.

ILL-WILL.* n. s. [ill and will.] Disposition to envy or hatred.

Thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.
Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

Ros. Why look you so upon me?
Pheb. For no ill-will I bear you. Shakspeare, As you like it.

ILL-WI'LLER.* n. s. One who wishes or intends ill to another.

If I were a man, I would fight for you; sure you have some ill-willers; I would slay them.
Beaum. and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

Having usually many ill-willers, many disaffected malecontents. Barrow, Works, i 93.

I'M. Contracted from I am.

IM is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is im in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

I'MAGE. n. s. [image, Fr. imago, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? St. Matt. xxii. 20.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, ever more talking. Shakspeare.

Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shakspeare.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh set the carved image in God's house.
2 Chron. xxxiii. 7.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shakspeare.
I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrours of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.
He made us to his image all agree:
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakspeare, K. John.
The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden, Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.
The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shakspeare.
Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.
When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

IMAGE-WORSHIP.* n. s. The worship of images or idols.
They are endeavouring to make proselytes, who are startled at image-worship. Trapp, Popery truly stated, P. i.
In 787 another council met at Constantinople first, and was afterwards translated to Nice, in which the decree of the former synod was exploded, and image-worship first established in the church. This council was called, by the empress Irene, a bigotted image-worshipper. Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

To I'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.
How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.
Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades
Went quick. Philips.
His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.
Fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

I'MAGERY.† n. s. [from image.]
1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.
Of marble stone was cut
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Spenser, F. Q.
When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery;
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden, Kn. Tale.
Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden, Æn.

2. Show; appearance.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Bp. Taylor.
What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear. Prior.
All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.
It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.
I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

5. Form; make.
They are our brethren, and pieces of the same imagery with ourselves. Feltham, Res. ii. 53.

IMA'GINABLE. adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.
It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South.
Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson.

IMA'GINANT. adj. [imaginant, Fr.] Imagining; forming ideas.
We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMA'GINANT.* n. s. One who is prone to form strange ideas.
Fascination is the power and act of imagination, intensive upon other bodies, than the body of the imaginant.
Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.
The air of common report, or the single testimony of some superstitious and melancholy imaginant.
Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 223.

IMA'GINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imagine.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.
False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakspeare.
Expectation whirls me round:
The imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.
Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Ralegh, Hist.
Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison, Cato.

IMAGINA'TION. n. s. [imaginatio, Lat. imagination, Fr. from imagine.]
1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.
Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.
Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanville.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton, P. L.
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image of the mind; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention.
Sidney.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.
Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lam. iii. 60.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us. Locke.

IMA'GINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

To IMA'GINE. v. a. [imaginer, Fr. imaginor, Lat.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakspeare.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Ps. xxi. 11.

IMA'GINER. n. s. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

IMA'GINING.* n. s. [from imagine.] Fancy; imagination.

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To IMBA'LM.* See To EMBALM.

IMBA'RGO.* See EMBARGO.

IMBA'RMENT.* n. s. Bar or opposition. See To EMBAR.

Only her povertie was the maine imbarment of her marriage. Tr. of Boccace, (1620,) p. 110.

To IMBA'RK.* See To EMBARK.

To IMBA'RN.* v. a. [from barn.] To lay up in a barn.

If a farmer hath both a fair harvest, and that also well inned and imbarned, and continuing safe there, yet if God give him not the grace to use and utter this well, all his advantages are to his loss. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 30.

To IMBA'SE.* v. a. To debase. See To EMBASE.

They that imbase coin and metals, and obtrude them for perfect and natural. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 8. ch. 4.

To IMBA'SE.* v. n. To sink in value.

The books of the learned themselves, by ambitiously heaping up the conceits and authorities of other men, increase much in the bulk, but do as much imbase in true value. Hales, Rem. p. 35.

To IMBA'STARDIZE.* v. a. [from bastardize.] To convict of being a bastard, or degenerate.

The rest, imbastardized from the ancient nobleness of their ancestors, are ready to fall flat. Milton, Eiconoclast. Pref.

To IMBA'THE.* v. a. [from bathe.] To bathe all over. Not of Milton's coinage, as I long since had an opportunity of proving.

Fear had taught to barre
Hot kisses from desire to press too farre,
To imbathe themselves. Tasso's Aminta Engl. (1628,) A. i. S. 1.
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers, strew'd with asphodel. Milton, Comus.

Methinks a sovran and reviving joy must needs rush into the bosom of him that reads or hears, and the sweet odour of the returning gospel imbathe his soul with the fragrancy of Heaven. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

IMBE'CILE.† adj. [imbecillis, Lat. imbecille, Fr.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

We were, in respect to God, imbecile and lost. Barrow, Works, vol. ii. S. 22.

To IMBE'CILE.† v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle. Dr. Johnson. —This is not the fact. Embezzle, or imbezzle, is formed from a very different word. See To EMBEZZLE. Our old lexicography defines "to imbesil, to purloin," but not to weaken. See Bullokar's Expositor. Bishop Jeremy Taylor uses the verb before us, imbecile, simply in the sense of weaken, without any allusion to injustice, which Dr. Johnson affixes to it in the example from that great man's "Holy Living;" but a second from his "Holy Dying" will prove what I assert.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations; simply, to weaken.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

It is a sad calamity, that the fear of death should so imbecill man's courage and understanding. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 7. ch. 3.

IMBECI'LITY. n. s. [imbecillité, Fr.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakspeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

IMBE'DDED.* See EMBEDDED.

A number of glands imbedded in the cellular substance. Outlines of Anatomy, ch. 1. § ult.

IMBE'LLICK.* adj. [in and bellicus, Lat.] Not warlike. See BELLICK. Cockeram.

The imbellick peasant, when he comes first to the field, shakes at the report of a musket. Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639,) p. 423.

To IMBE'ZZLE.* v. a. To steal; to purloin; to take from. See To EMBEZZLE.

He could, by his providence, preserve the books so written from being imbezzled or corrupted. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

IMBE'ZZLEMENT.* n. s. Theft. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

I must require you to use diligence in presenting specially those purloinings and imbezzlements, which are of plate, vessels, or whatsoever within the king's house. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 15.

To IMBI'BE.† v. a. [imbibo, Lat. imbiber, Fr.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.

The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.
Illumin'd wide
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson, Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this errour, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive. Dr. Johnson.—Cotgrave translates the French imbibé into "imbued, moistened, soaked, or drunk in." But see To IMBUE.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBI'BER. n. s. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbuthnot.

IMBIBI'TION. n. s. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBI'TTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison, Freeholder.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame. South.

3. To exasperate.

IMBI'TTERER.* n. s. [from the verb.] That which makes bitter.

The fear of death has always been considered as the greatest enemy of human quiet, the polluter of the feast of happiness, and the embitterer of the cup of joy. Johnson in Taylor's Serm.

To IMBLA'ZON.* v. a. [blasonner, Fr.] To adorn with figures of heraldry. See To EMBLAZON.

To describe races and games,
Or tilting furniture, imblazon'd shields. Milton, P. L.

IMBLA'ZONRY.* See EMBLAZONRY.

To IMBO'DY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals
An heavenly form embodied, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet it is more than our imbodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville, Scepsis.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am so imbodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakspeare.

Never since created, man
Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry

Under their head imbodied all in one. Milton, P. L.

Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops imbodied from the Sabine land. Dryden, Æn.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To IMBO'DY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton, Comus.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBO'IL. v. n. [from boil.] To exestuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not now in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shakspeare, Timon.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden, Æn.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

IMBO'NITY.* n. s. [in and bonitas, Lat.] Want of goodness. See BONITY.

All fears, griefs, suspicions, discontents, imbonities, insuavities, are swallowed up and drowned in this Euripus, this Irish sea. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 215.

To IMBO'RDER.* v. a. [from border.] To terminate; to bound.

Thick-woven arborets, and flowers
Imborder'd on each bank. Milton, P. L.

To IMBO'SK.* v. n. [imboscare, Ital. "to enter a wood, to lay in ambush, to take shelter as a deer doth." Florio, 1598.] To lie concealed.

They seek the dark, the bushy, the tangled forest; they would imbosk. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

To IMBO'SS.* See To EMBOSS.

To IMBO'SOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son. Milton, P. L.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurst. Sidney.

Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all she might, more plainly to appear. Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,
Which was imbounded in this beauteous clay. Shakspeare.

To IMBO'W.† v. a. [from bow. The word at first was embow. See what is noticed, in respect to the orthography, in EMBOW.] To arch; to vault.

Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

To IMBO'WEL.* See To EMBOWEL. Donne writes it imbowel.

To IMBO'WER.† v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

You whom highest heaven imbowers,
Praise the Lord with all your powers. Sandys, Ps. cxlvii.
A shady bank,
Thick over-head with verdant roof imbower'd. Milton, P. L.
And stooping thence to Ham's imbowering walks,
In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To IMBO'WER.* v. n. See To EMBOWER.

IMBO'WMENT. n. s. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To IMBO'X.* v. a. [emboister, emboiter, Fr. whence to emboss, for embox, in the sense of enclose. See the third sense of EMBOSS.] To shut or close up as in a box. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

To IMBRA'ID.* v.a. [See To EMBRAID.] To upbraid. Obsolete. Huloet.

To IMBRA'NGLE. v. a. To entangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

IMBRE'D.* adj. [from breed.] Generated within. See INBRED.

To be wise, that is, to search the truth, is a disposition imbred in every man. Hakewill on Providence, p. 288.

I'MBRICATE.* adj. [imbricatus, from imbrex, Latin.] Laid one under another.

Two rows on each side of the belly consist of larger scales, ovate and imbricate. Russell, Acc. of Indian Serpents, p. 7.

I'MBRICATED. adj. [imbricatus, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICA'TION. n. s. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBRO'WN.† v. a. [Ital. imbrunir.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound. Gay.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with im or em. I have here sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embrued,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdued. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embrued the face
Of that accursed caitiff. Daniel, Civil Wars.

The merciless Turks, embrued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles, Hist.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.
Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.
Lo! these hands in murder are imbrued,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

There, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar descry'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Ægysthus' veins imbrued;
The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Spenser, F. Q.

To IMBRU'TE.† v. a. [from brute. Ital. imbruttare.] To degrade to brutality.

We find how far natural corruption, improved with ignorance and want of education or religion, can imbrute the manners of men. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 16.

I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast, and, mix'd with beastial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton, P. L.

To IMBRU'TE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton, Comus.

To IMBU'E.† v. a. [imbuo, Latin. This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adjective is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

Her face with blushing shamefac'dness imbued. Sandys, Ovid, B. i.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodward.

To IMBU'RSE.† v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French. The word is old in our lexicography; and Sherwood defines it "to purse up."

IMITABI'LITY. n. s. [imitabilis, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

I'MITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Latin; imitable, Fr.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To I'MITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.

I would caress some stable-man of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Bramston, Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden, Æn.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITA'TION. n. s. [imitatio, Lat. imitation, Fr.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

I'MITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Lat.]

1. Inclined to copy; as, Man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; as, Painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

I'MITATOR. n. s. [Lat. imitateur, French.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dryden.

I'MITATORSHIP.* n. s. [from imitator.] The office or employment of an imitator.

My soul adores judicial scholarship;
But when to servile imitatorship
Some spruce Athenian pen is prentized,
'Tis worse than apish. Marston, Scourge of Vil. iii. 9.

IMMA'CULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat. immaculé, Fr.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shakspeare.

The king, whom catholicks count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heaven did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham, Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

IMMA'CULATELY.* adv. [from immaculate.] Without blemish; purely.

IMMA'CULATENESS.* n. s. [from immaculate.] Purity; innocence.

Candour and immaculateness of conversation. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 140.

IMMA'ILED.* adj. [from mail.] Wearing mail or armour.

Swarms
Of men immail'd. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 4.

IMMA'LLEABLE.* adj. [in and malleus, a hammer, Latin.] Not to be wrought upon; not to be impressed.

Oh the stiffness of a Romish zeal! how immalleable does it render their stony natures to the force of all humane impressions! Memoirs of Sir Edmonbury Godfrey, (1682,) p. 79.

To IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled. Milton, Comus.

IMMA'NE.† adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of the word, and gives no example. It is, by our old writers, often coupled with cruelty, to denote excessive or monstrous cruelty; and Cockeram defines immane, cruel, wild. See also IMMANELY.

Doth it not appertain to the just judgement of God to avenge such immane cruelties? Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 179.

Those immane cruelties, which divers have exercised upon men's dead bodies. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 207.

Immane Arcturus, weeping Pleiades,
Orion, who with storms plows up the seas. Sandys, Job, p. 15.

What immane difference is there between the twenty-fourth of February, and commencement of March? Evelyn, B. i. ch. 17. § 3.

IMMA'NELY.* adv. [from immane.] Monstrously; cruelly.

They have not done the same by the power of miracles and integrity of life, but only by dint of sword, which did so immanely and barbarously make havock of them, to the destruction of some millions. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 178.

A man of excessive strength, valiant, liberal, and fair of aspect, but immanely cruel. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 1.

I'MMANENCY.* n. s. [in and maneo, Lat.] Internal dwelling.

The immanency and inherency of this power in Jesus is evident in this, that he was able to communicate it to whom he pleased. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

I'MMANENT. adj. [immanent, Fr. in and maneo, Lat.] Intrinsick; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellections, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMA'NIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMMA'NITY.† n. s. [immanitas, Lat. immanité, Fr. A word very common in Shakspeare's time, and since; but Dr. Johnson has no other example than the single one from Shakspeare; and the commentators on the poet, explaining its meaning, have yet left it unsupported by any other instance.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shakspeare.

Maximinus, for the immanity of his mind and doings, was usually termed Cyclops, Busiris, Phalaris, Typhon. Dean King, Serm. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 25.

We shall be then most assured to taste of their fierce immanities. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 138.

A belluine kind of immanity never ranged so among men. Howell, Lett. iii. 15.

The poet brings in his goddess blaming the rusticks for their immanity. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 333.

IMMARCE'SSIBLE.† adj. [in and marcesco, Latin; immarcessible, old Fr. Cotgrave, and Roquefort.] Unfading.

So minister discipline, that you forget not mercy; that when the Chief Shepherd shall come, you may receive the immarcessible crown of glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Form of Consecr. of Bishops, (1629.)

This crown, which Thou hast laid up for me, is immarcessible. Bp. Hall, Med. of the Love of Christ, § 11.

They were inflamed with the desire of enlarging the kingdom of Christ here, and of obtaining that immarcessible crown hereafter. More on the Seven Churches, ch. 3.

If the prize which we expect in the race of our imperfect obedience be an immarcessible crown. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

Not for a garland of flowers, but for wreaths of immarcessible glory. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 105.

IMMA'RTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My powers are unfit,
Myself immartial. Chapman, Odyssey.

To IMMA'SK.✝ v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

With thy deity
Shade and inmaske the errors of my pen.
Marston, Pigm. Image, Address to Good Opinion, (1598.)

IMMA'TCHABLE.* adj. [in and matchable.] Not matchable; peerless.

Where learned More and Gardiner I met,
Men in those times immatchable for wit.
Mir. for Mag. p. 530.

IMMATE'RIAL. adj. [immateriel, Fr. in and materia, Lat.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LITY.✝ n. s. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

There are sicknesses that walk in darkness, and there are exterminating angels that fly wrapt up in the curtains of immateriality.
Bp. Taylor, Funer. Serm. on the Countess of Carbery.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATE'RIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMMATE'RIALIST.* n. s. [from immaterial.] One who professes immateriality.

Dr. George Berkeley became founder of a sect, called immaterialists. Swift, Lett. to Ld. Carteret.

IMMATE'RIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Lat.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville, Scepsis.

IMMATE'RIALNESS. n. s. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATE'RIATE.✝ adj. [in and materia, Lat.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immateriate, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immateriate, or less materiate; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

Philo makes all immateriate beings to be created in this first day. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 144.

IMMATU'RE.✝ adj. [immaturus, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.

Immature or unripe hopes. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 529.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature dissension cease,
Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

How were we affected here in England for Prince Henry's immature death! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 163.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives till seventy. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

IMMATU'RELY.✝ adv. [from immature.] Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

They ripen though you crop them immaturely.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 333.

Had not his thread of life been immaturely cut, he might have surpassed the age of any of his royal ancestors.
Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 110.

Must noble Hastings immaturely die?
Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

IMMATU'RENESS.✝ } n. s. [from immature.] Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.
IMMATU'RITY. }

In state, many things at first are crude and hard to digest, which time and deliberation can supple and concoct: but in religion, wherein is no immaturity, nothing out of season, it goes far otherwise. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgement. Glanville.

IMMEABI'LITY. n. s. [immeabilis, Lat.] Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidity, and consequently immeability of the juices. Arbuthnot.

IMMEA'SURABLE. adj. [in and measure.] Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them. Hooker.

From the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild. Milton, P. L.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean. Milton, S. A.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether? Addison, Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Nor oars to cut the immeasurable way. Pope, Odyssey.

IMMEA'SURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead. Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd
Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey. Milton, P. L.

IMMEA'SURED.* adj. [in and measure.] Exceeding common measure.

Geaunts, and such dreadful wights,
As far exceeded men in their immeasur'd mights.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 8.

Immecha'nical. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Cheyne.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with immechanical notions. Mead.

Imme'diacy. n. s. [from immediate.] Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakespeare.

He led our powers,
Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

IMME'DIATE. adj. [immediat, French; in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakspeare, Timon.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he presumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,
By some immediate stroke. Milton, P. L.

But she, howe'er of victory sure,
Contemns the wreath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate power,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

Imme'diately. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip
Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton
Immediately to marry. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Imme'diateness. n. s. [from immediate.]

1. Presence with regard to time.
2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

Imme'dicable.† adj. [immedicable, French; immedicabilis, Latin.] Not to be healed; incurable.

For which immedicable blow,
Due to that time, me dooming heaven ordain'd,
Wherein confusion absolutely reign'd. Mir. for Mag. p. 522.

Wherein had concurred such abundance of malignant humours, that it might truly be said, it was immedicable. Tr. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 136.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton, S. A.

Immelo'dious.* adj. [in and melodious.] Not melodious; unmusical.

My lute, be as thou wast, when thou didst grow
With thy green mother in some shady grove,
When immelodious winds but made thee move.
Drummond, Sonn. to his Lute.

Imme'morable.† adj. [immemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering; unworthy of remembrance. Huloet, and Bullokar.

IMMEMO'RIAL. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

Immemo'rially.* adv. [from immemorial.] Beyond memory.

Both word and thing being immemorially known in Greece. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 50.

IMME'NSE. adj. [immense, Fr. immensus, Lat.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce! Milton, P. L.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Grew.

Imme'nsely. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass. Bentley.

Imme'nseness.* n. s. [from immense.] Unbounded greatness.

The immenseness of whose excellencies [is] too highly raised for us. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 43.

The immenseness of the victory, and the consequences that might have attended it. Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 512.

Imme'nsity. n. s. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabrick, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderale part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,
Are suns, are centers. Blackmore, Creation.

Immensurabi'lity. n. s. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMME'NSURABLE. adj. [in and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.

Imme'nsurate.* adj. [in and mensuratus, Lat.] Unmeasured.

It fell into an immensurate distance from it.
W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 168.

To Imme'rge.† v. a. [immergo, Latin.]

1. To put under water.
2. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

Their heads are gross, their souls are immerged in matter, and drowned in the moistures of an unwholsome cloud.
Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653,) p. 208.

IMME'RIT. n. s. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

Imme'rited.* adj. [Lat. immeritus.] Not deserved.

Those, on whom I have in the plenteousest manner showered my bounty and immerited favour, have darted on me.
King Charles, in the Princely Pelican, p. 279.

IMME'RITOUS.* adj. [Lat. immeritus.] Undeserving; of no value.

A frothy, immeritous, and undeserving discourse. Milton, Colasterion.

To IMME'RSE. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood
More than a mile immers'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison, Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMME'RSE. adj. [immersus, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immateriate, or less materiate; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMME'RSION.† n. s. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison, Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

If it were true, that, all the swallows which inhabit a country, plunge into the water or land annually in October, and rise from their subaqueous bed in the following April; there must have been frequent opportunities of observing them, either in the instant of their immersion, or, what is much more curious, in the moment of their emersion, or during their long repose at the bottom of the pool. Tr. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

It was the Platonic doctrine, that humane souls or minds descended from above, and were sowed in generation, that they were stunned, stupified, and intoxicated by this descent and immersion into animal nature. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 313.

IMMETHO'DICAL.† adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

Rude, harsh, immethodical. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 711.

The unskilful and immethodical teaching of their pastor. Milton, Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church.

The nature of their work required, that they should first begin with immethodical collections, and indigested experiments, before they go on to finish and compose them into arts. Sprat, Hist. of the R. Soc. p. 319.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodical author to the hunting of a duck; when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHO'DICALLY.† adv. [from immethodical.] Without method; without order.

The Spirit of God does nothing immethodically, nor in vain. More on the Seven Churches, p. 12.

IMMETHO'DICALNESS.* n. s. [from immethodical.] Want of method or order; confusion.

To IMME'W.* v. a. To mew or coop up; to confine. See To EMMEW.

My soul is free as ambient air,
Although my baser part's immew'd;
Whilst loyal thoughts do still repair
To accompany my solitude.
Song in Lloyd's Memoirs, (1668,) p. 96.

To I'MMIGRATE.* v. n. [Lat. immigro.] To enter or pass into; to go to dwell in some place. Cockeram.

They immigrate into the wishes they utter. Novels, &c. (1668,) p. 67.

IMMIGRA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. immigratio.] An entering or passing into a place.

Hitherto I have considered the Saracens either at their immigration into Spain about the ninth century, or at the time of the crusades, as the first authors of romantic fabling among the Europeans. Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. sign. C. 3. b.

The immigrations of the Arabians into Europe, and the crusades, produced numberless accounts, partly true and partly fabulous, of the wonders seen in the eastern countries. Ibid. p. 101.

I'MMINENCE.† n. s. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. A word not in use, Dr. Johnson says. Formerly it was imminency, as in the enlarged Expositor of Bullokar; and perhaps is not yet disused.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

I'MMINENT. adj. [imminent, Fr. imminens, Lat.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death. Shakspeare.

These she applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakspeare.

To them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgements imminent. Milton, P. L.

Men could not sail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

To IMMI'NGLE. v. a. [in and mingle.] To mingle; to mix; to unite.

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life
Toil'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain
This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace immingle charms. Thomson, Summer.

IMMINU'TION.† n. s. [from imminuo, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

Without any addition, imminution, or alteration. Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, p. 14.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a Providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBI'LITY. n. s. [from immiscible.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMI'SCIBLE. adj. [in and miscible.] Not capable of being mingled. Richardson, Clarissa.

IMMI'SSION.† n. s. [immissio, Latin.] The act of sending in; contrary to emission.

To God must be ascribed these stirrings, these breakings; whether, by a just but efficacious permission, as sins; or by a just immission, as punishments. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 76.

Transient immisions, and representations of the ideas of things future to the imagination. South, Serm. iii. 416.
His immission of a pestilence upon the Grecians. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 101.

To IMMI'T.† v. a. [immitto, Latin.] To send in; to inject.
But grant an entire efficacy to this balsamic liquor, [oil or juice of cedar,] thus clysterwise immitted into the intestines; yet — medicines, this way exhibited to the dead, immediately flow out again. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705,) p. 273.

IMMI'TIGABLE.* adj. [in and mitigo, Lat.] Not to be softened.
Did she mitigate these immitigable, these iron-hearted men? Harris.

Samson, with these immix'd, inevitably
Pull'd down the same destruction on himself. Milton.

IMMI'XABLE. adj. [in and mix.] Impossible to be mingled.
Fill a glass sphere with such liquors as may be clear, of the same colour, and immixable. Wilkins.

IMMI'XT.* adj. [Lat. immixtus.] Unmixed. This seems to be an improper usage of the word; yet formerly was not thought so.
The most ancient and immixt people in the universe. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 377.
It doth steady stand, all-uniform,
Pure, pervious, immixt, innocuous, mild. More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 22.

IMMOBI'LITY. n. s. [immobilité, French, from immobilis, Latin.] Unmovableness; want of motion; resistance to motion.
The course of fluids through the vascular solids must in time harden the fibres, and abolish many of the canals; from whence driness, weakness, immobility, and debility of the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

IMMO'DERACY.* n. s. [from immoderate.] Excess.
The strength of delight is in its seldomness or rarity, and sting in its satiety: mediocrity is its life, and immoderacy its confusion. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 1.

IMMO'DERATE. adj. [immoderé, Fr. immoderatus, Lat.] Excessive; exceeding the due mean.
One means, very effectual for the preservation of health, is a quiet and chearful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray on the Creation.

IMMO'DERATELY. adv. [from immoderate.] In an excessive degree.
Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death. Shakspeare.
The heat weakened more and more the arch of the earth, sucking out the moisture that was the cement of its parts, drying it immoderately, and chapping it. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

IMMO'DERATENESS.* n. s. [from immoderate.] Want of moderation.
Doth Solomon speak this of honey's excess only, and not of immoderateness in general? Shelford, Learned Disc. p. 85.
Adversaries join together in reproaching us for this moderation; and, by their immoderateness in so doing, do also justify the moderation of our church. Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Engl. p. 41.

IMMODERA'TION.† n. s. [immoderation, Fr. from immoderate.] Want of moderation; excess.
There was an immoderation and fault in anger. Hammond, Pract. Catech. ii. § 6.
It may very well suit with the immoderations of the times. Gregory, Notes on Script. ch. 26.
Their sin proceeded from themselves; — and consists in the abuse of his fatherly indulgence by a wilful immoderation and excess. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 10.

IMMO'DEST.† adj. [immodeste, Fr. in and modest.]
1. Wanting shame; wanting delicacy or chastity.
She railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her. Shakspeare.
So dangerous a thing is an ignorant and indiscreet preacher, and a bold, immodest auditor. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 225.
More immodest was the pretence of the dean of Norwich's conversion [to popery] about two years since. The Missionaries' Arts Discovered, (1688,) p. 61.
2. Unchaste; impure.
Immodest deeds you hinder to be wrought;
But we proscribe the least immodest thought. Dryden.
3. Obscene.
'Tis needful that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon, and learn'd; which, once attain'd,
Comes to no farther use
But to be known and hated. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Immodest words admit of no defence,
For want of decency is want of sense. Roscommon.
4. Unreasonable; exorbitant; arrogant.

IMMO'DESTLY.* adv. [from immodest.] In a shameless or immodest manner.
He would have us live soberly; — not wantonly, not immodestly, not incontinently. Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576,) sign. L. iii. b.
This these Corinthian women (conceiting themselves, when they prayed or prophesied in the church, to be acting the part of she-priests, uttering oracles like the Pythiæ, or celebrating sacrifice as the Mænades or Bacchæ,) were so fond as to imitate; and accordingly cast off their veils, and discovered their faces immodestly in the congregation; and thereby (as the apostle speaks) dishonoured their heads. Mede, Diatr. p. 259.

IMMO'DESTY.† n. s. [immodestie, Fr. from immodest.]
1. Want of delicacy; impudence.

He the immortality of souls proclaim'd,
Whom th' oracle of men the wisest nam'd. Denham.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God, and the nature of his immortality. Cheyne.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

IMMO'RTALLY. adv. [from the adjective.] So as never to die.

IMMORTALIZA'TION.* n. s. [from immortalize; Fr. immortalisation.] An immortalizing. Cotgrave.

To IMMO'RTALIZE.† v. a. [immortaliser, Fr. from immortal.]

1. To make immortal; to perpetuate; to exempt from death.

For mortal things desire their like to breed,
That so they may their kind immortalize. Davies, Nosce Teipsum.

Muster not the want of issue among your greatest afflictions, as those do, that cry, Give me children, or else my name dies; the poorest way of immortalizing that can be, and as natural to a cobler as a prince. Osborne, Adv. to a Son, p. 70.

Christ is risen from the grave, having conquered death by dying; and is ascended into the pure and peaceable habitations of glory: Therefore all his members, who are united to Him in the inseparable bands of faith and love, shall feel the effects of his powerful life, in immortalizing their very bodies. Hallywell, Saving of Souls, p. 103.

2. To exempt from oblivion.

Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd. Shakspeare.

Revenge — by fresh returns of provocation brings in, what has in vain been attempted in nature, a kind of "perpetual motion" in malice, and immortalizes quarrels and contentions. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 185.

To IMMO'RTALIZE. v. n. To become immortal. This word is, I think, peculiar to Pope.

When an executor meddles with the immovable estate, before he has seized on the moveable goods, it may be then appealed from the execution of sentence. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. Unshaken; unaffected.

How much happier is he, who, centring on himself, remains immovable, and smiles at the madness of the dance about him! Dryden, Don Sebastian.

IMMOV'ABLENESS.* n. s. [from immovable.] The state or quality of being immovable. Ash.

IMMO'VABLY. adv. [from immovable.] In a state not to be shaken.

Immovably firm to their duty, when they could have no prospect of reward. Atterbury.

IMMU'ND.* adj. [immonde, Fr. immundus, Lat.] Unclean. Not now in use.

Through their own nastiness and sluttishness, immund, and sordid manner of life, they suffer their air to putrify, and themselves to be choaked up. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 81.

IMMUNDI'CITY.* n. s. [Fr. immondicité.] Uncleanness; impurity.

Nor is there any moral immundicity of a more dangerous insinuation, than this of wanton discourse. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 138.

IMMU'NITY. n. s. [immunité, Fr. immunitas, Lat.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.

Of things harmless whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for any man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most insolent madness. Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption from onerous duties.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor. Sidney.

Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil. 1 Mac. xiii. 34.

The laity invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Sprat, Serm.

3. Freedom.

Common apprehensions entertain the antidotal condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures. Brown, Vulg. Err.

But this annex'd condition of the crown,
Immunity from errours, you disown. Dryden.

To IMMU'RE. v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emurer, old French, so that it might be written emmure.] To enclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Pity, you ancient stones, these tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls! Shakspeare.

One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;
And shall I think in silver she's immur'd! Shakspeare.

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long boat. Wotton.

Lysimachus immured it with a wall. Sandys, Travels.

Though a foul foolish prison her immure
On earth, she, when escap'd, is wise and pure. Denham.

Immu're. n. s. [from the verb.] A wall; an enclosure, as in Shakspeare, but perhaps no where else.

Their vow is made
To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakspeare, Prol. Tr. and Cress.

Immu'sical. adj. [in and musical.] Inharmonious; wanting proportion of sound.

All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immusical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We consider the immusical note of all swans we ever beheld or heard of. Brown.

Immutabi'lity.† n. s. [immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilité, Fr. from immutable.] Exemption from change; invariableness; unchangeableness.

To shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel. Heb. vi. 17.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God. Cheyne, Philos. Principles.

The Egyptians are the healthiest people of the world, by reason of the immutability of their air. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 147.

IMMU'TABLE. adj. [immutabilis, Lat.] Unchangeable; invariable; unalterable.

By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lye, we have a strong consolation. Heb. vi.

Thy threatenings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;
But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.

Immu'tableness.* n. s. [from immutable.] Unchangeableness.

Immu'tably. adv. [from immutable.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.

His love is like his essence, immutably eternal. Boyle.

Immuta'tion.* n. s. [Lat. immutatio.] Change; alteration.

Lo, what delightful immutations
On her soft flowing vest we contemplate. More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 23.

Strong and violent hath been the immutation which sudden joy hath wrought in the body. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 21.

IMP.† n. s. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout, a sprig. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Steevens and Mr. Chalmers give the same etymon. "But Mr. Steevens needed not to have travelled to Wales," says Mr. H. Tooke, "for that which he might have found at home. Our language has absolutely nothing from the Welsh. Imp is the past participle of the Sax. impan, to plant, to graft." Div. of Purl. ii. 311. — Without stopping to notice here the sweeping assertion as to the Welsh language, which will be considered in another part of this dictionary, I may add that the Germ. impfen, is also to graft; and that the earliest usage of our word, is in the sense of the shoot of a tree.]

1. A graff, scion, or sucker; "an imp, or young slip of a tree." Barret.

Of feble trees there comen wretched imps. Chaucer, Monk's Prol.

Boughs, branches, twigs, yoong imps, sprayes, and buds. Newton, Herbal to the Bible, 1587.

2. A son; the offspring; progeny; a youth.

That most noble imp, the prince's grace, your most dear son. Ld. Cromwell to K. Hen. VIII.

And thou, most dreaded imp of highest Jove,
Fair Venus' son! Spenser, F. Q.

That faire city, wherein make abode
So many learned imps, that shoot abrode,
And with their braunches spred all Britany. Spenser, F. Q.

The tender imp was weaned from the teat. Fairfax.

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Loath them as the most basely-begotten imps. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Proving
A toward imp, I call'd him home. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

3. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense it is still retained.

In this our age, the church of England is vexed with two horrible impes and messengers of our enemie Sathan. Anderson, Expos. upon Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 28. b.

Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan. Hooker.

The serpent — after long debate irresolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose,
Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
From sharpest sight. Milton, P. L.

As soon as you can hear his knell,
This god on earth turns d——l in hell;
And, lo! his ministers of state,
Transform'd to imps, his levee wait. Swift.

To Imp.† v. a. [impio, to engraff, Welsh; impan, Sax. impfen, Germ.]

1. To plant; to graft. It was formerly also used as a verb neuter. Now wholly obsolete.

Thus taught and prechid hath Reson;
But Love yspilte hath her sermon,
That was so impid in my thought,
That her doctrine I set at nought. Chaucer, Rom. R. 5137.

Lesynges I imped,
Tyll they beare leaves of smowthe speach. Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 22. b.

2. To lengthen or enlarge with any thing adscititious. It is originally a term used by falconers, who repair a hawk's wing with adscititious feathers.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings. Shakspeare.

This bird was hatched in the council of Lateran, fully plumed in the council of Trent, and now lately hath her feathers imped by the modern casuists. Bp. Hall, Old Relig. ch. 13. § 1.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp their serpent-wings. Milton, Sonnet.

Help, ye tart satirists to imp my rage
With all the scorpions that should whip this age. Cleaveland.

With cord and canvas from rich Hamburgh sent,
His navy's molted wings he imps once more. Dryden.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.

The Mercury of heaven, with silver wings
Imp'd for the flight, to overtake his ghost. Southern.

I'mpacable.* adj. [Lat. impacatus.] Not to be softened or appeased.

Freed from bands of impacable fate,
And power of death, they live for aye above. Spenser, Ruins of Time.

To Impa'ct. v. a. [impactus, Lat.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted so thick and confusedly together. Woodward on Fossils.

To Impa'int. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shakspeare.

To IMPA'IR. v. a. [empirer, to make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence. See To EMPAIR.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hooker.

Objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milton, P. L.
That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton, P. R.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt the approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

To IMPA'IR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair quoth he, but reason can repair. Spenser, F. Q.

IMPA'IR.† n. s. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not now used.

The ladies think it a most desperate impair to their quickness of wit. B. Jonson, Epicœne.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by site than dust of steel. Brown.

I'MPAIR.* adj. [impar, Lat.] Unsuitable. Obsolete.

What he has, he gives, what thinks, he shews;
Yet gives he not till judgement guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Nor is it more impaire to an honest and absolute man. Chapman, Tr. of the Shield of Homer, (1598,) Pref.

IMPA'IRER.* n. s. [from impair.] That which impairs.

Immoderate labour and immoderate study are equally the impairers of health. Warburton.

IMPA'IRMENT.† n. s. [from impair. Diminution; injury.

Cold and moist are the qualities which worke an impairment in the reasonable part. Carew, Trial of Wits, (1594.)

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown, Vulg. Err.

IMPA'LATABLE.* adj. [in and palatable.] Not suitable to the palate; not pleasing to the taste; disagreeable.

To IMPA'LE.* See To EMPALE.

IMPA'LEMENT.* See EMPALEMENT.

To IMPA'LLID.* v. a. [from pallidus, Lat.] To make pale.

It [Envy] is the green-sickness of the soul, that, feeding upon coals and puling rubbish, impallids all the body to a hectick leanness. Feltham, Res. ii. 56.

To IMPA'LM.* v. a. [empalmer, Fr. in and palma, Lat.] To seize or take into the hand; to grasp. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPALPABI'LITY.* n. s. [from impalpable.] The state or quality of not being perceived by touch.

He [pope Gregory the Great] and Eutychius, the patriarch of Constantinople, had a curious dispute, whether the bodies of the righteous, after the resurrection, should be solid, or thinner than the air? Gregory was for the palpability, and Eutychius for the impalpability; and the dispute ended, as it is to be supposed, in a grievous quarrel. Jortin, Remarks on Ecc. Hist. vol. 3. p. 170. (ed. 1805.)

IMPA'LPABLE.† adj. [impalpable, Fr. in and palpable.]

1. Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

2. Not coarse or gross.

His own religion, from its simple and impalpable form, was much less exposed to the ridicule of scenic exhibition. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 200.

IMPA'NATE.* adj. [impanatus, low Lat. from in and panis.] Embodied in bread. See IMPANATION.

This speech meaneth not that the body of Christ is impanate. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 369.

To IMPA'NATE.* v. a. [impanatus, low Lat.] To embody with bread.

If the elements really contain such immense treasures, what need have we to look up to the natural body above? or what have we to do but to look down to those impanated riches, to the elements ennobled with all graces and virtues, and replenished with that very divinity which makes the humanity so considerable? Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 64.

IMPANA'TION.* n. s. [impanation, Fr. from impanatus, low Lat.] A supposed subsistence of the body of Christ with the species of bread in the Lord's Supper. See CONSUBSTANTIATION.

Forasmuch as he is joyned to the bread but sacramentally, there followeth no impanation thereof; no more than the Holy Ghost is inaquate, that is to say, made of water, being sacramentally joyned to the water in baptisme. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 368.

Some have imagined that our Lord's divinity becomes personally united with the elements, as well as with his own natural body, having in that sense two personal bodies. This conceit has sometimes gone under the name of "assumption," as it imports the Deity's assuming the elements into a personal union; and sometimes it has been called impanation, a name following the analogy of the word "incarnation." Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 34.

IMPA'NNEL.* See EMPANNEL.

To IMPA'RADISE.† v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did overcloud it. Sidney, Arc.

For there that soul imparadized lies. Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign N. i. b.

O my bright lovely brooke, whose name doth bear the sound
Of God's first garden-plot, the imparadized ground.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 30.

All my souls be
Emparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne, Poems, p. 20.
Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton, P. L.

IMPA'RALLELED.* adj. [in and parallel.] Not to be paralleled; unmatched.

That this dear price should be paid for a little wild mirth, or gross and corporal pleasure, is a thing of such imparalleled folly, that if there were not too many instances before us, it might seem incredible. Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 168.

IMPA'RDONABLE.* adj. [in and pardonable.] Irremissable.

Not that it is in its nature impardonable. South, Serm. x. 323.

IMPA'RITY.† n. s. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Difference in degree either of rank or excellence.

He, who by the hand of his holy Apostle, founded this church of Crete in Titus, and his elders, in a meet and decent imparity and subordination, would maintain his own ordinance amongst us also. Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 54.

To IMPA'RK.† v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common. The orthography seems to be empark. See To EMPARK.

IMPA'RLANCE.* See EMPARLANCE.

To IMPA'RT.† v. a. [impartir, old Fr. to give, Lacombe; impertio, Lat.]

1. To grant: to give.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont to impart. Milton, P. L.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton, P. L.

IMPA'RTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden, Æn.

IMPA'RTIALIST.* n. s. [from impartial.] One who is impartial.

I am professedly enough an impartialist.
Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 76.

IMPARTIA'LITY. n. s. [impartialité, French; from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPA'RTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgement; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPA'RTIBLE. adj. [impartible, Fr. from impart.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPA'RTMENT.* n. s. [from impart.] Communication of knowledge; disclosure. Not in use.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

IMPA'SSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Ralegh.

Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try,
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton, P. L.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy desarts. Temple.

IMPA'SSABLENESS.* n. s. [from impassable.] Incapability of admitting passage.

As no carts used to come here by reason of the impassableness of the boggy soil, it is a common proverb, That all the carts which come to Crowland were shod with silver.
Crutwell, Tour through Gr. Brit. (Lincolnshire.)

IMPASSIBI'LITY.† n. s. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

These bodies of ours shall come out of their graves with all their parts entirely as they now are; altered indeed, I confess, in quality, in agility, in glory and splendour, in impassibility.
Hales, Rem. Serm. at the End, p. 22.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

IMPA'SSIBLE.† adj. [impassible, Fr. in and passio, Lat.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

This most pure part of the soul, and (as Aristotle sayeth) divine, impassible, and incorruptible, is named in Latin "intellectus." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 201.

After Thy resurrection and knowledge of Thine impassible condition, it was not strange for them to talk of Thy kingdom.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.

Secure of death I should contemn thy dart,
Though naked and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPA'SSIBLENESS. n. s. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibleness of the next? Decay of Chr. Piety.

To IMPA'SSION.† v. a. [in and passion.] To move with passion; to affect strongly. See To EMPASSION. Milton's empassion'd, so given by Dr. Johnson, should be impassion'd, as it is here, and not as an adjective, as Dr. Johnson has pronounced it.

So, standing, moving, or to highth upgrown,
The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began. Milton, P. L.

In the impassion'd man,
Concealing art with art, the poet sunk.
Thomson, Liberty, P. ii.

IMPA'SSIONATE.* adj.

1. Strongly affected. See EMPASSIONATE.

2. Without feeling; free from passion.

A kind of stupidity or impassionate hurt.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 191.

These reproaches we may take coolly and calmly, as that Stoick philosopher did, who whilst he was discoursing of being free from passions, (it being the doctrine of that sect, that a wise man should be impassionate,) a rude fellow spat purposely in his face; and when he was asked, whether he were not angry, answered, No, truly, I am not angry, but I doubt whether I should not be angry at such an abuse; but there is a God that will not put up our contumelies so; we strike his servants on earth, and he feels it in heaven.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 123.

To IMPA'SSIONATE.* v. a. [from impassion.] To affect powerfully.

It is evident in the Gospel, that our Saviour Christ was one while deeply impassionated with sorrow.
More, Conj. Cabb. (1653.) p. 203.

IMPA'SSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty phantoms were,
Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden, Æn.
Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away;
And on the impassive ice the lightnings play. Pope.

IMPA'SSIVENESS.* n. s. [from impassive.] The state of being impassive.

We find all those figurings of apathy and impassiveness to prove but coloured and fruitless conceptions. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 62.

IMPASTA'TION.* n. s. [from imposte.] A mixture of divers materials of different colours, and consistencies, baked or bound together with some cement, and hardened either by the air or fire. Chambers.

To IMPA'STE.† v. a. [empaster, Fr.]

1. To knead or make into dough or paste; to paste; to concrete as into paste.

Horridly trick'd
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. [In painting.] To lay on colours thick and bold.

IMPA'TIBLE.* adj. [impatibilis, Lat.] Intolerable; not to be borne. Cockeram.

IMPA'TIENCE.† n. s. [impatience, Fr. impatientia, Lat.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The experiment I resolved to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

Fie! how impatience lowereth in your face! Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

No further with your din
Express impatience. Shakspeare, Cymb.

The longer I continued in this scene, the greater was my impatience of retiring from it. Hurd.

IMPA'TIENT.† adj. [impatient, Fr. impatiens, Lat.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear: with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion; with at before the occasion: with of, impatience is referred more to the thing; with at, to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

4. Hot; hasty.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison, Spect.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd power. Dryden.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope, Odyssey.

6. Not to be borne.

Ay me! deare lady, which the ymage art
Of ruefull pity and impatient smart. Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 44.

IMPA'TIENT.* n. s. One who is not able to bear pain; one who is violently agitated by passion.

I have heard and seen some ignorant impatients, when they have found themselves to smart with God's scourge, cast a sullen frown back upon him, with Cur me cædis? Seasonable Serm. p. 39.

IMPA'TIENTLY.† adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness.

Foaming at the mouth, impatiently he raves. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 18.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration. Clarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

IMPATRONIZA'TION.* n. s. [impatronisation, Fr. from impatronize.] An absolute mastery, seigniory, or possession of. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. See To IMPATRONIZE.

To IMPA'TRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to one's self the power of any seigniory. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the duchy. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To IMPA'WN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake the sleeping sword of war. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To IMPE'ACH.† v. a. [empecher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use. Dr. Johnson. — Where used, by our old authors, it is most frequently and properly empeach. See To EMPEACH.

His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life. Davies.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy. Hayward.

A defluxion on my throat impeached my utterance. Howell.

2. To accuse by publick authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons. Addison.

Great dissentions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached. Swift.

3. To bring into question.

You do impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

IMPE'ACH. n. s. [from the verb.] Hindrance; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly. Shakspeare.

IMPE'ACHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable. Grew.

IMPE'ACHER. n. s. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour. Gov. of the Tongue.

IMPE'ACHMENT. † n. s. [empechement, Fr.]

1. Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. But it has always been used, as Mr. Ritson also has observed, in the same sense, as a legal word in deeds: as, without impeachment of waste, i. e. without restraint or hindrance of waste. It should be written, in this sense, empeachment.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof. Spenser on Ireland.

Tell thy king, I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impeachment. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to Christian liberty, or ensnaring of men's consciences. Sanderson.

2. Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution. Addison.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state. Swift.

3. Imputation; reproach.

He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet,
And did request me, to importune you,
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. Ver.

To IMPE'ARL.† v. a. [emperler, Fr. "to imperle, to deck, or set thick with pearls." Cotgrave.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on every leaf, and every flower. Milton, P. L.

2. To decorate as with peals.

The dews of the morning impearl every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth. Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABI'LITY. n. s. [impeccabilité, Fr. from impeccable.] Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes. Pope.

IMPE'CCABLE.† adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

If we honour the man, must we hold his pen impeccable? Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 43.

Thou makest no man so acceptable, as that Thou makest him impeccable. Donne, Devot. p. 592.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his. Hammond on Fundamentals.

God is infallible, impeccable, and absolutely perfect. Skelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. iv.

IMPE'CCANCY.* n. s. [old Fr. impeccance.] Impeccability.

Holy spirits dignified, from their purity and impeccancy. Waterhouse on Fortescue, p. 218.

To IMPE'DE.† v. a. [impedio, Lat. Considered by Heylin, in 1656, as an uncouth and unusual word.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede its passage. Decay of Chr. Piety.

The way is open, and no stop to force
The stars return, or to impede their course. Creech, Manilius.

IMPE'DIMENT.† n. s. [impedimentum, Lat.]

1. Any obstruction to passage; as, a stake, or sharp instrument, to retard the progress of an enemy: a military term. This primary sense of the word [in and pedes, Lat.] is overlooked by Dr. Johnson.

The children of Israel had prepared for war, and had shut up the passages of the hill country, and had fortified all the tops of the high hills, and had laid impediments in the champaign countries. Judith, v. 1.

2. Hindrance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience. Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them. Hooker.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let. Hooker.

But for my tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shakspeare.

May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,
Dream of impediment. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech. St. Mark, vii. 32.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

Free from the impediments of light and noise,
Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs. Waller.

To IMPE'DIMENT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To obstruct; to hinder.

Lest Themistocles, out of hatred to his person, should have withstood and impedimented a general good. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 15.

IMPEDIME'NTAL.* adj. [from impediment.] Hindering; causing obstruction.

The impedimental stain which intercepts her fruitive love. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 132.

To I'MPEDITE.* v. a. [Lat. impedio, impeditus.] To retard; to obstruct.

When diseases do not — impedite any faculty. Maynwaring, Preserv. of Health, (1670,) p. 25.

IMPEDI'TION.* n. s. [Lat. impeditio.] Hindrance. Cockeram.

I'MPEDITIVE.* adj. [from impedite.] Causing hindrance; having power to obstruct.

There are other cases concerning things unlawful by accident, in respect to the evil effect of the same; to wit, as they may be impeditive of good, or causative, or at the least (for we must use such words) occasionative of evil. Bp. Sanderson on Promiss. Oaths, iii. § 11.

To IMPE'L. v. a. [impello, Lat.] To drive on towards a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide. Dryden, Ov.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast. Pope.

Propitious gales
Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails. Pope, Odyss.

A mightier pow'r the strong directions sends,
And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends;
This drives them constant to a certain coast. Pope.

IMPE'LLENT.† n. s. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

S. What do you mean by voluntary oaths?
C. Those that no other impellent but myself, or my own worldly gain or interest, extort from me. Hammond, Pract. Catech. ii. § 8.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture. Glanville.

IMPE'LLER.* n. s. [from impel.] One that impels or urges forward.

As if he were the great impeller and inducer of men to sin. South, Serm. iv. 85.

To IMPE'N.* v. a. [from pen.] To shut up; to enclose in a narrow place.

Like a sheep impenn'd in the fold. Feltham, Res. ii. 59.

Of solid proof, impenetrably dull. Pope.

IMPE'NITENCE. } n. s. [impenitence, Fr. in and peni-
IMPE'NITENCY. } tence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillotson.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers.

IMPE'NITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted one impe[illegible] men's requests; as, on the other side, the Apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted. Hooker.

They died
Impenitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves. Milton, P. L.

IMPE'NITENT.* n. s. One who neglects the duty of repentance.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.

IMPE'NITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in. Hammond.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets! Pope.

IMPE'NNOUS. adj. [in and penna, Lat.] Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

It is generally received an earwigg hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impennous insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

IMPE'RSONALLY. adv. [from impersonal.] According to the manner of an impersonal verb.

To IMPE'RSONATE.* v. a. [from personate.] To personify.

The masques and pageantries of the age of Elizabeth were not only furnished by the heathen divinities, but often by the virtues and vices impersonated. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 498.

Ella, thus figuratively, and with the introduction of Mastership impersonated, exhorts his heroes to battle. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 15.

Some of these masques were moral dramas, where the virtues and vices were impersonated. Hurd, Dial.

IMPERSPICU'ITY.* n. s. [in and perspicuity.] Want of clearness or perspicuity.

Either very long, or very short, periods are subject to obscurity: one not opening and spreading the matter enough; the other overburdening the auditor's memory. Yet whoso will not lose the acuteness and elegancy in the one, or suffer the dismembring in the other, must in some things hazard the imperspicuity of his style. Instructions for Oratory, (Oxf. 1682,) p. 98.

IMPERSPI'CUOUS.* adj. [in and perspicuous.] Wanting clearness. Bailey.

IMPERSUA'SIBLE. adj. [in and persuasibilis, Lat.] Not to be moved by persuasion.

Every pious person ought to be a Noah, a preacher of righteousness; and if it be his fortune to have as impersuasible an auditory, if he cannot avert the deluge, it will yet deliver his own soul, if he cannot benefit other men's. Dec. of Piety.

IMPE'RTINENCE.† } n. s. [impertinence, French; from IMPE'RTINENCY. } impertinent.]

1. That which is of no present weight; that which has no relation to the matter in hand; something not belonging to the subject.

Some though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinencies. Bacon.

O, matter and impertinency mix'd,
Reason and madness! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Troublesomeness; intrusion.

It will be said I handle an art no way suitable to my employments or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton on Architecture.

We should avoid the vexation and impertinence of pedants, who affect to talk in a language not to be understood. Swift.

3. Trifle; thing of no value.

I envy your felicity, delivered from the gilded impertinencies of life, to enjoy the moments of a solid contentment. Evelyn.

Nothing is more easy than to represent as impertinencies any parts of learning, that have no immediate relation to the happiness or convenience of mankind. Addison.

There are many subtle impertinencies learnt in the schools, and many painful trifles, even among the mathematical theorems and problems. Watts on the Mind.

4. Sauciness; rudeness.

It often happens in publick assemblies, that a party who came thither together, or whose impertinencies are of an equal pitch, act in concert, and are so full of themselves as to give disturbance to all that are about them. Sometimes you have a set of whisperers, who lay their heads together in order to sacrifice every body within their observation; sometimes a set of laughers, that keep up an insipid mirth in their own corner, and by their noise and gestures shew they have no respect for the rest of the company. Spectator, No. 168.

IMPE'RTINENT.† adj. [impertinent, Fr. in and pertinens, Lat.]

1. Of no relation to the matter in hand; of no weight.

The law of angels we cannot judge altogether impertinent unto the affairs of the church of God. Hooker.

The contemplation of things that are impertinent to us, and do not concern us, are but a more specious idleness. Tillotson.

2. Importunate; intrusive; meddling.

That spear directed by an impertinent malice, which opened his side, though it brought forth blood and water, caused no dolorous sensation; because the body was then dead. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

3. Foolish; trifling; negligent of the present purpose.

'Tis not a sign two lovers are together, when there can be so impertinent as to enquire what the world does. Pope.

4. Rude; unmannerly.

The ladies, whom you visit, think a wise man the most impertinent creature living; therefore you cannot be offended, that they are displeased with you. Spectator, No. 148.

IMPE'RTINENT.† n. s.

1. A trifler; a meddler; an intruder; one who enquires or interposes where he has no right or call.

Governours would have enough to do to trouble their heads with the politicks of every meddling officious impertinent. L'Estrange, Fab.

2. A rude, unmannerly, or saucy person

There are another kind of impertinents, which a man is perplexed with in mixed company; and those are your loud speakers. Spectator, No. 148.

IMPE'RTINENTLY.† adv. [from impertinent.]

1. Without relation to the present matter.

I call not impertinently to mind, that one of my time had wit enough in Venice to become the civil head of that republick. Sir H. Wotton, Surv. of Education.

Yet more impertinently the Spanish describers, remembered before, account their longitude from east to west, utterly against all other geography. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 270.

Those moral virtues — are here brought in by St. Paul, I hope not impertinently, under this head, justice, and continence, and judgement to come. Hammond, Works, iv. 521.

2. Troublesomely; officiously; intrusively.

I have had joy given me as preposterously, and as impertinently, as they give it to men who marry where they do not love. Sir J. Suckling.

The blessedest of mortals, now the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so impertinently importuned, that great part of the liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hooker.

Why will any man be so impertinently officious as to tell me all this is only fancy? If it is a dream, let me enjoy it. Addison.

3. Rudely; saucily.

IMPERTU'RBABLE.* adj. [in and perturb.] Impossible to be disturbed; incapable of being disturbed. Ash, from Dict. of Arts.

IMPERTURBA'TION.* n. s. [in and perturbation; Lat. imperturbatus.] Calmness; tranquillity; freedom from perturbation.

In our copying of this equality and imperturbation, we must profess with the Apostle, we have not received the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 342.

To propose the acquisition of a complete knowledge of all things in this life, of an absolute imperturbation of mind, and constant infallibility, is no less vain. Hen. Wharton, Serm. (1698,) ii. 116.

IMPERTU'RBED.* adj. [in and perturb.] Undisturbed; calm. Bailey.

IMPE'RVIOUS. adj. [impervius, Lat.]

1. Unpassable; impenetrable.

Lest the difficulty of passing back
Stay his return, perhaps, over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton, P. L.

We may thence discern of how close a texture glass is, since so very thin a film proved so impervious to the air, that it was forced to break the glass to free itself. Boyle.

The cause of reflection is not the impinging of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies. Newton, Opticks.

A great many vessels are, in this state, impervious by the fluids. Arbuthnot.

From the damp earth impervious vapours rise,
Increase the darkness, and involve the skies. Pope.

2. Inaccessible. Perhaps improperly used.

A river's mouth impervious to the wind,
And clear of rocks. Pope, Odyss.

IMPE'RVIOUSLY.* adv. [from impervious.] Impenetrably; unpassably.

IMPE'RVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from impervious.] The state of not admitting any passage.

IMPERTRANSIBI'LITY. n. s. [in and pertranseo, Lat.] Impossibility to be passed through.

I willingly declined those many ingenious reasons given by others; as of the impertransibility of eternity, and impossibility therein to attain to the present limit of antecedent ages. Hale.

To IMPE'STER. v. a. [empestrer, Fr.] To trouble; to harass; to entangle; to incumber; to pester. See To PESTER. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPETI'GINOUS. adj. [from impetigo, Lat.] Scurfy; covered with small scabs.

I'MPETRABLE. adj. [impetrabilis, from impetro, Lat. impetrable, Fr.] Possible to be obtained. Dict.

To I'MPETRATE.† v. a. [impetrer, Fr. impetro, Lat.] To obtain by intreaty.

He hath impetrated reconciliation. Abp. Usher, Letter xxiii. Life and Letters by Parr, p. 50.

Impetrating this of God, that this penitential satisfaction may be so much blessed, as to restore some value of time thither, where I am to account for so much idle dissipation of it. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. Pref.

I'MPETRATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Obtained by application or intreaty.

The one might be as facilly impetrate as the other. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 227.

IMPETRA'TION.† n. s. [impetration, Fr. impetratio, from impetro, Lat.] The act of obtaining by prayer or intreaty. Not much used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the authority, which indeed is excellent, of bishop Jeremy Taylor. But the word appears to have been common; and was also applied formerly to the pre-obtaining from the court of Rome benefices belonging to the king, which was prohibited.

The said cardinal did not know the impetration of the said bulls to have been to the contempt and prejudice of the king, or that it was against any statute. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 264.

Application and impetration, in this matter we have in hand, are of equal extent. Abp. Usher, Lett. xxiii.

The impetration of some favour. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. Pref.

The blessed sacrament is the mystery of the death of Christ, and the application of his blood which was shed for the remission of sins, and is the great means of impetration, and the meritorious cause of it. Bp. Taylor.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy, and means of impetration in this world. Bp. Taylor.

I'MPETRATORY.* adj. [from impetrate.] Beseeching; obtaining by intreaty.

Alms are therefore effective to the abolition and pardon of our sins, because they are preparatory to, and impetratory of, the grace of repentance, and are fruits of repentance.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 3. ch. 2.

IMPETUO'SITY. n. s. [impetuosité, Fr. from impetuous.] Violence; fury; vehemence; force.

I will set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The whole intrigue was contrived by the duke, and so violently pursued by his spirit and impetuosity. Clarendon.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to take their freest range, and act with the utmost impetuosity. Dec. of Piety.

IMPE'TUOUS.† adj. [impetueux, Fr. from impetus, Latin. This word Heylin, in 1656, enumerates among the uncouth and uncommon. But see IMPETUOUSLY.]

1. Violent; forcible; fierce.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood,
Rolling its course, design'd their country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluted weed. Prior.

2. Vehement of mind; passionate.

The king, 'tis true, is noble, but impetuous. Rowe.

IMPE'TUOUSLY.† adv. [from impetuous.] Violently; vehemently: both of men and things.

Impatient of the wrong, impetuously he raves.
Drayton, Polyolb. (1622,) S. 1.

He would be — dissolutely wanton, impetuously self-willed.
Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 22.

They view the windings of the hoary Nar;
Through rocks and woods impetuously he glides,
While froth and foam the fretting surface hides. Addison.

IMPE'TUOUSNESS. n. s. [from impetuous.] Violence; fury; vehemence of passion.

I wish all words of rage might vanish in that breath that utters them; that as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, so they might in transientness. Decay of Piety.

I'MPETUS.† n. s. [Latin.] Violent tendency to any point; violent effort.

There is a sort of valour, which naturally springs out of the very crasis and temper of men's bodies; which is nothing else but a certain impetus, or brisk fermentation of the blood and spirits. Scott, Serm. before the Artillery-Comp. (1680.)

Why did not they continue their descent till they were contiguous to the sun, whither both mutual attraction and impetus carried them? Bentley, Serm. vii. (1692.)

IMPI'CTURED.* adj. [from picture.] Painted; impressed.

His pallid face, impictured with death,
She bathed oft. Spenser, Astrophel.

I'MPIER.* n. s. Our old word for umpire, which leads us to the Latin etymon, impar; and induces us to discard what Dr. Johnson, and those whom he has followed, propose as the root of umpire. See UMPIRE. Huloet thus defines the word, in the form now given. "Impier, or umpier, a judge or mediator taken to deem a matter debated."

To IMPI'ERCE.* v. a. [in and pierce.] To pierce through; to penetrate. See To EMPIERCE.

He feels those secret and impiercing flames.
Drayton's Moyses, (1604.)

Time may come, when deep impierced sting
Shall prick your heart; and it shall melt with sorrowing.
More, Song of the Soul, i. iii. 34.

IMPIE'RCEABLE. adj. [in and pierce.] Impenetrable; not to be pierced.

Exceeding rage inflam'd the furious beast; —
For never felt his impierceable breast
So wondrous force from hand of living wight. Spenser, F. Q.

IMPI'ETY. n. s. [impiété, French; impietas, Latin.]

1. Irreverence to the Supreme Being; contempt of the duties of religion.

To keep that oath were more impiety
Than Jeptha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter. Shakspeare.

2. An act of wickedness; expression of irreligion. In this sense it has a plural.

If they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of those impieties for which they are now visited. Shakspeare.

Can Juno such impieties approve? Denham.

We have a melancholy prospect of the state of our religion: such amazing impieties can be equalled by nothing but by those cities consumed of old by fire. Swift.

To IMPI'GNORATE. v. a. [in and pignus, Latin.] To pawn; to pledge.

IMPIGNORA'TION. n. s. [from impignorate.] The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

To IMPI'NGE. v. n. [impingo, Latin.] To fall against; to strike against; to clash with.

Things are reserved in the memory by some corporeal exuviæ and material images, which, having impinged on the common sense, rebound thence into some vacant cells of the brain.
Glanville, Scepsis.

The cause of reflexion is not the impinging of light on the solid or impervious parts of bodies. Newton, Opticks.

To IMPI'NGUATE. v. a. [in and pingues, Latin.] To fatten; to make fat.

Frictions also do more fill and impinguate the body than exercise; for that in frictions the inward parts are at rest. Bacon.

I'MPIOUS. adj. [impius, Latin.] Irreligious; wicked; profane; without reverence of religion.

That Scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think. Hooker.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton, P. L.

Then lewd Auchemolus he laid in dust,
Who stain'd his stepdame's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

And impious nations fear'd eternal night. Dryden.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine:
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickell.

They, impious, dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

Grand mistakes in religion proceed from taking literally what was meant figuratively, from which several impious absurdities followed, terminating in infidelity. Forbes.

I'MPIOUSLY. adv. [from impious.] Profanely; wickedly.

The Roman wit, who impiously divides
His hero and his gods to different sides,
I would condemn. Granville.

I'MPIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from impious.] Contempt of the duties of religion.

Men — even by nature are taught to hope of another life, from which neither ignorance nor impiousness can drive them.
Sir W. Cornwallis, Disc. on Seneca.

IMPLACABI'LITY.† n. s. [from implacable.] Inexorableness; irreconcilable enmity; unappeasable malice.

What calamity happened to that most noble citie of Rome by the implacabilitie, or wrath insatiable, of these two captains!
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 101.

The powder project — with fury and implacability came to be resolved on by a pack of boutefeux.
Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) D d. 2.

IMPLA'CABLE.† adj. [implacabilis, Lat. implacable, Fr.]

1. Not to be pacified; inexorable; malicious; constant in enmity.

His incensement is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Darah bears a generous mind;
But to implacable revenge inclin'd;
A bounteous master, but a deadly foe. Dryden.

The French are the most implacable and the most dangerous enemies of the British nation. Addison.

2. Admitting no relief or ease; not to be assuaged. Dr. Johnson overpasses this sense.

O how I burne with implacable fyre! Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 44.

I burn
With scorching heat of implacable fire.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, v. 15.

Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in and bruis'd
Into their substance pent, which wrought them pain
Implacable, and many a dolorous groan. Milton, P. L.

IMPLA'CABLENESS.* n. s. [from implacable.] The state of being implacable. Ash.

IMPLA'CABLY. adv. [from implacable.]

1. With malice not to be pacified; inexorably.

An order was made for disarming all the papists; upon which, though nothing was after done, yet it kept up the apprehensions in the people of dangers, and disinclined them from the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige. Clarendon.

2. It is once used by Dryden in a kind of mixed sense of a tyrant's love.

I love,
And 'tis below my greatness to disown it:
Love thee implacably, yet hate thee too. Dryden.

To IMPL'ANT. v. a. [in and planto, Latin.] To infix; to insert; to place; to engraft; to settle; to set; to sow. The original meaning of putting a vegetable into the ground to grow is not often used.

How can you him unworthy then decree,
In whose chief part your worths implanted be? Sidney.

See, Father! what first-fruits on earth are sprung,
From thy implanted grace in man! Milton, P. L.

No need of publick sanctions this to bind,
Which Nature has implanted in the mind. Dryden.

There grew to the outside of the arytenoides another cartilage, capable of motion, by the help of some muscles that were implanted in it. Ray.

God, having endowed man with faculties of knowing, was no more obliged to implant those innate notions in his mind, than that, having given him reason, hands, and materials, he should build him bridges. Locke.

IMPLANTA'TION.† n. s. [implantation, Fr. from implant.] The act of setting or planting; the act of enfixing or settling.

This [is] more especially by the expressed way of insition or implantation. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 48.

IMPLA'USIBLE.† adj. [in and plausible.] Not specious; not likely to seduce or persuade.

So improbable, so implausible means for accomplishing so great effects. Barrow, Works, i. 343.

Nothing can better improve political school-boys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

IMPLA'USIBLY.* adv. [from implausible.] Without show of probability.

To IMPLE'ACH.* v. a. [from pleach.] To interweave. See To PLEACH.

These talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd,
I have receiv'd from many a several fair.
Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

To IMPLE'AD.* v. a. [old Fr. emplaider. See To EMPLEAD.] To accuse; to indict.

The honour of God seemeth violated by these invasions, since even the law of God is said to be impleaded by such aspersions. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. p. 127.

Righteousness in a judicial sense imports as much as a legal discharge, whereby the person impleaded becomes right in the court, or righteous. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 91.

IMPLE'ADER.* n. s. [from To implead.] An accuser; one who indicts another.

Ye envious and deadly malicious, ye impleaders and action-threatners, how long shall the Lord suffer you in his house, in which dwelleth nothing but peace and charity!
Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 176.

The Gombette law, which was instituted by Gondebaud king of Burgundy in the year 501, allowed the expedient of duelling to those impleaders, whom the administered oath to offenders did not sufficiently satisfy for an obtaining of their resigned and voluntary acquittance from the cause complained of. Hist. of Duelling, p. 3.

IMPLE'ASING.* adj. [in and please.] Not pleasing; disagreeable.

A melancholy man is a strayer from the drove; one that nature made sociable, because she made him man; and a crazed disposition hath altered; impleasing to all, as all to him.
Overbury, Charact. (ed. 1627,) sign. G. 5. b.

To IMPLE'DGE.* v. a. [from pledge.] To gage; to pawn. Sherwood.

I'MPLEMENT. n. s. [implementum, from impleo, Latin.]

1. Something that fills up vacancy, or supplies wants.

Unto life many implements are necessary; more, if we seek such a life as hath in it joy, comfort, delight, and pleasure. Hooker.

2. Instrument of manufacture; tools of a trade; vessels of a kitchen.

Wood hath coined seventeen thousand pounds, and hath his tools and implements to coin six times as much. Swift.

It is the practice of the eastern regions for the artists in metals to carry about with them the whole implements of trade, to the house where they find employment. Broome.

IMPLE'TION. n. s. [impleo, Latin.] The act of filling; the state of being full.

Theophrastus conceiveth, upon a plentiful impletion, there may succeed a disruption of the matrix. Brown.

I'MPLEX. adj. [implexus, Latin.] Intricate; entangled; complicated: opposed to simple.

Every poem is, according to Aristotle's division, either simple or implex: it is called simple when there is no change of fortune in it; implex, when the fortune of the chief actor changes from bad to good, or from good to bad.
Addison, Spect. No. 297.

To I'MPLICATE. v. a. [impliquer, Fr. implico, Latin.] To entangle; to embarrass; to involve; to infold.

The ingredients of saltpetre do so mutually implicate and hinder each other, that the concrete acts but very languidly. Boyle.

IMPLICA'TION. n. s. [implicatio, Lat. implication, French, from implicate.]

1. Involution; entanglement.

Three principal causes of firmness are the grossness, the quiet contact, and the implication of the component parts. Boyle.

2. Inference not expressed, but tacitly inculcated.

Though civil causes, according to some men, are of less moment than criminal, yet the doctors are, by implication, of a different opinion. Ayliffe, Parergon.

I'MPLICATIVE.* adj. [from To implicate.] Having implication.

I'MPLICATIVELY.* adv. [from implicative.] By implication.

In revealing the confession of these men, it is implicatively granted, their fault was not then to be punished, and so it appears no fault. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646,) p. 102.

Virtually and impliedly, and by necessary consequence, it takes away clergy from the principal in all those cases, where it takes it from the accessary before.
Hale, H. P. C. ch. 49. V. sect. 2.

IMPLI'CIT.† adj. [implicite, Fr. implicitus, Latin.]

1. Entangled; infolded; complicated. This sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says, citing two examples of the word which he ascribes to Pope and Thomson; the latter of which belongs to Milton, and not to Thomson. The sence of "wrapped up" is what our old lexicography assigns to implicit. See Bullokar's Expositor, edit. 1656.

The humble shrub,
And bush with frizzled hair implicit. Milton, P. L. vii. 323.

Many of them [periods] together, if without connexions, are but implicit argumentation at most.
Instruct. for Oratory, Oxf. (1682,) p. 37.

In his woolly fleece
I cling implicit. Pope.

2. Inferred; tacitly comprised; not expressed.

In the first establishments of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such and such words should be signs, whereby they would express their thoughts one to another. South.

Our express requests are not granted, but the implicit desires of our hearts are fulfilled. Smalridge.

3. Resting upon another; connected with another over which that which is connected to it has no power; trusting without reserve or examination. Thus, by implicit credulity, I may believe a letter yet not opened, when I am confident of the writer's veracity.

There be false peaces or unities, when the peace is grounded but upon an implicit ignorance; for all colours will agree in the dark. Bacon.

No longer by implicit faith we err,
Whilst every man's his own interpreter. Denham.

IMPLI'CITLY. adv. [from implicit.]

1. By inference comprised, though not expressed.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence: he may acknowledge what he will with his mouth, but in his heart he hath said there is no God. Bentley.

2. By connexion with something else; dependently; with unreserved confidence or obedience.

My blushing muse with conscious fear retires,
And whom they like, implicitly admires. Roscommon.

Learn not to dispute the methods of his providence; but humbly and implicitly to acquiesce in and adore them.
Atterbury.

We implicitly follow in the track in which they lead us, and comfort ourselves with this poor reflection, that we shall fare as well as those that go before us. Rogers.

IMPLI'CITNESS.* n. s. [from implicit.] The state of being implicit; implication; dependance on the judgement or authority of another. Scott.

IMPLI'CITY.* n. s. [implicité, Fr. from implicit.] Entanglement; incumbrance; obscure involution.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

IMPLI'EDLY.* adv. [from the participle implied.] By inference comprised, though not expressed; by implication.

These informers, in this frontispiece before their several suggestions, impliedly undertake to make good three assertions.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 1.

IMPLORA'TION.* n. s. [old French, imploration; from implore.] Solicitation; supplication.

This imploration and worship is holy. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 250.

The three points, wherein they did pretend to have prevented his majesty's former imploration of their concurrence.
Sir H. Wotton, Dispatch in 1622, Rem. p. 541.

To IMPLO'RE. v. a. [implorer, Fr. imploro, Lat.]

1. To call upon in supplication; to solicit.

They ship their oars, and crown with wine
The holy goblet to the pow'rs divine,
Imploring all the gods that reign above. Pope, Odyss.

2. To ask; to beg.

Do not say 'tis superstition, that
I kneel, and then implore her blessing. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

IMPLO'RE. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of begging; intreaty; solicitation. Not in use.

Urged sore

Open to them so many of the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with that title. South.

Form new legends,
And fill the world with follies and impostures. Irene.

IMPO'STURED.* adj. [from imposture.] Having the nature of imposture.

What have vile I to do with noble day,
Which shews us heaven's fair face! that face which I
Wantonly scorn'd, and cast my love away
Upon impostur'd lust's foul mystery. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 102.

IMPO'STUROUS.* adj. [from imposture.] Deceitful; cheating.

Twice my thoughts were prompted by mine eye to hold thy strictness false and imposterous. Beaum. and Fl. Woman-Hater.

A proud, lustful, imposturous villain.
More, Lett. ix. Ward's Life of Dr. More, p. 352.

I'MPOTENCE.† } n. s. [impotence, old French; impo-
I'MPOTENCY. } tentia, Latin.]

1. Want of power; inability; imbecillity; weakness.

Sir J. Hayward.

Weakness, or the impotence of exercising animal motion, attends fevers. Arbuthnot.

God is a friend and a father, whose care supplies our wants, and defends our impotence, and from whose compassion in Christ we hope for eternal glory hereafter. Rogers.

This is not a restraint or impotency, but the royal prerogative of the most absolute King of kings; that he wills to do nothing but what he can; and that he can do nothing which is repugnant to his divine goodness. Bentley.

2. Ungovernableness of passion. A Latin signification; animi impotentia.

Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
Belike through impotence, or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
To punish endless? Milton, P. L.

Yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

3. Incapacity of propagation.

Dulness with obscenity must prove
As hateful, sure, as impotence in love. Pope.

I'MPOTENT. adj. [impotent, Fr. impotens, Latin.]

1. Weak; feeble; wanting force; wanting power.

We that are strong must bear the imbecillity of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

Yet wealth is impotent
To gain dominion, or to keep it gain'd. Milton, P. R.

Although in dreadful whirls we hung,
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison, Spect.

2. Disabled by nature or disease.

In those porches lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, and withered. St. John, v. 3.

There sat a certain man, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked. Acts, xiv.

I have learn'd that fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary. Shakspeare.

The impotent poor might be relieved, and the idle forced to labour. Temple.

3. Without power of restraint. [Animi impotens.]

With jealous eyes at distance she had seen,

Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

4. Without power of propagation.

He told beau Prim, who is thought impotent, that his mistress would not have him, because he is a sloven, and had committed a rape. Tatler.

I'MPOTENT.* n. s. One who languishes under disease.

Your task shall be
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.
Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

I'MPOTENTLY.† adv. [from impotent.]

1. Without power.

The church of England is blessed with a true clergy, and glorious; and such a one, as his Italian generation may impotently envy and snarle at.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 96.

Proud Cæsar, 'midst triumphal cars,
The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and impotently great,
Shew'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in state. Pope.

2. Without government of passion; extravagantly.

He loves her most impotently, and she loves not him.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 576.

The danger is of being impotently passionate.
More, Conj. Cabb. p. 203.

To IMPO'VERISH.* See To EMPOVERISH.

IMPO'VERISHMENT.* n. s. [from impoverish.] Cause of poverty; drain of wealth. See EMPOVERISHMENT.

It might tend to the state's impoverishment.
Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) sign. H h.

The king afterward extended his bounty in so large and ample a manner, as procured his own impoverishment.
Sir A Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 4.

To IMPO'UND. v. a. [in and pound. See POUND.]

1. To enclose as in a pound; to shut in; to confine.

The great care was rather how to impound the rebels, that none of them might escape, than that any doubt was made to vanquish them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To shut up in a pinfold.

England
Hath taken and impounded as a stray
The king. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray, and impounded him, with intention to restore him to the right owner. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

With imprecations thus he fill'd the air,
And angry Neptune heard th' unrighteous pray'r. Pope.

I'MPRECATORY. adj. [from imprecate.] Containing wishes of evil.

To IMPRE'GN.† v. a. [in and prægno, Lat. Lord Monboddo considered this word as coined by Milton; but it was common before his time, though Dr. Johnson found no example earlier than that of the poet.] To fill with young; to fill with any matter or quality; to make pregnant.

The cane did again appear with a linen hanging thereat so grossly impregned, as it promised to be delivered of a most happy burthen. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iv. 13.

Semele doth Bacchus bear,
Impregn'd of Jove More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 58.

In her ears the sound
Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregn'd
With reason, to her seeming. Milton, P. L.

The unfruitful rock itself, impregn'd by thee,
Forms lucid stones. Thomson.

IMPRE'GNABLE. adj. [imprenable. Fr.]

1. Not to be stormed; not to be taken.

Two giants kept themselves in a castle, seated upon the top of a rock, impregnable, because there was no coming to it but by one narrow path, where one man's force was able to keep down an army. Sidney.

Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their helps alone defend ourselves. Shakspeare.

Hast thou not him, and all
Which he calls his, inclosed with a wall
Of strength impregnable? Sandys.
There the capitol thou see'st,
Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpeian rock, her citadel
Impregnable. Milton, P. R.

2. Unshaken; unmoved; unaffected; invincible.

The man's affection remains wholly unconcerned and impregnable; just like a rock, which, being plied continually by the waves, still throws them back again, but is not at all moved. South.

IMPRE'GNABLY. adv. [from impregnable.] In such a manner as to defy force or hostility.

A castle strongly seated on a high rock, joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys.

To IMPRE'GNATE. v. a. [in and prægno, Lat.]

1. To fill with young; to make prolifick.

Hermaphrodites, although they include the parts of both sexes, cannot impregnate themselves. Brown.

Christianity is of so prolifick a nature, so apt to impregnate the hearts and lives of its proselytes, that it is hard to imagine that any branch should want a due fertility. Decay of Piety.

2. [impregner, Fr.] To fill; to saturate.

IMPRE'GNATE.† adj. [from the verb.] Impregnated; made prolifick.

The soul hereby grows (as it were) big, and impregnate with a temptation. South, Serm. vi. 155.

With native earth their blood the monsters mix'd;
The blood, endu'd with animating heat,
Did in the impregnate earth new sons beget. Dryden.

IMPREGNA'TION. n. s. [from impregnate.]

1. The act of making prolifick; fecundation.

They ought to refer matters unto counsellors, which is the first begetting or impregnation; but when they are elaborate in the womb of their counsel, and grow ripe to be brought forth, then they take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

2. That with which any thing is impregnated.

What could implant in the body such peculiar impregnations, as should have such power? Derham, Phys. Theol.

3. [Impregnation, Fr.] Saturation. Ainsworth.

IMPREJU'DICATE. adj. [in, præ, and judico, Lat.] Unprejudiced; not prepossessed; impartial.

The solid reason of one man with imprejudicate apprehensions, begets as firm a belief as the authority or aggregated testimony of many hundreds. Brown.

IMPREPARA'TION.† n. s. [in and preparation.] Unpreparedness; want of preparation.

Impreparation and unreadiness when they find in us, they turn it to the soothing up of themselves. Hooker.

It is our infidelity, our impreparation, that makes death any other than advantage. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

IMPRESCRI'PTIBLE.* adj. [old French, imprescriptible.] Without the compass of prescription: by no length of time to be aliened or lost. Such is Cotgrave's translation of imprescriptible. Coles gives the same definition of the word as an English one, Dict. 1685. It therefore is not modern in our language; though perhaps it was little regarded, till the late French democratical revolutionists had appended their's to words, the true import of which they grossly violated, "the rights of men and citizens." It appears to have been forgotten, when Johnson compiled his dictionary.

The end of every political association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man.
Nares, Rev. of the Fr. Declaration. &c. Ess. (1810,) ii. 156.

To IMPRE'SS.† v. a. [impresser, old French, to print: impressum, Lat.]

1. To print by pressure; to stamp.

When God from earth form'd Adam in the East,
He his own image on the clay imprest. Denham.
The conquering chief his foot imprest
On the strong neck of that destructive beast. Dryden, Ovid.

2. To fix deep.

We should dwell upon the arguments, and impress the motives of persuasion upon our own hearts, till we feel the force of them. Watts.

3. To mark; as impressed by a stamp.

So foul and ugly, that exceeding fear
Their visages imprest, when they approached near.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. To force into service. This is generally now spoken and written press.

[His] age has charms in it, [his] title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes
Which do command them. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Burnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him.
—— That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakspeare.

Ormond should contribute all he could for the making those levies of men, and for impressing of ships. Clarendon.

I'MPRESS.† n. s. [from the verb. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the last syllable, according to the ancient pronunciation; but it is now most frequently placed on the first.]

1. Mark made by pressure.

This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

They having taken the impresses of the insides of these shells with that exquisite niceness, as to express even the finest lineaments of them. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Effects of one substance on another.

How objects are represented to myself I cannot be ignorant; but in what manner they are received, and what impresses they make upon the differing organs of another, he only knows that feels them. Glanville, Scepsis.

3. Mark of distinction; stamp.

God, surveying the works of the creation, leaves us this general impress or character upon them, that they were exceeding good. South.

4. Device; motto. [impresa, Italian. And so our own word was formerly written either impresa or imprese.]

Impresas, and devices rare,
Of all her gallant knights. Peacham, Min. Brit. (1612.)
A gulling imprese for you at tilt. B. Jonson, Epigr. 73.
Imblazon'd shields,
Impreses quaint, caparisons and steeds. Milton, P. L.

5. Act of forcing any into service; compulsion; seizure. Now commonly press.

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.
Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Why such impress of shiprights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Your ships are not well mann'd;
Your mariners are muliteers, reapers, people
Ingrost by swift impress. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Impression; image fixed in the mind.

That he should give himself up to meer inconsiderate imaginations, and casual impresses, chusing them for his guide, because they are the strongest, not truest!
More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 245.

IMPRESSIBI'LITY.* n. s. [from impressible.] Capability of being impressed.

They [blue eyes] are sure signs of a tender impressibility, and sympathising disposition.

IMPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and pressum, Lat.] What may be impressed.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, figurable and not figurable, are plebeian notions. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

IMPRE'SSION. n. s. [impressio, Lat. impression, Fr.]

1. The act of pressing one body upon another.

Sensation is such an impression or motion, made in some part of the body, as produces some perception in the understanding. Locke.

2. Mark made by pressure; stamp.

Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear whelp,
That carries no impression like the dam. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. Image fixed in the mind.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies, they would not make a due impression on the mind. Atterbury.

The false representations of the kingdom's enemies had made some impression in the mind of the successor. Swift.

4. Efficacious agency; operation; influence.

The king had made him high sheriff of Sussex, that he might the better make impression upon that county. Clarendon.

We lie open to the impressions of flattery, which we admit without scruple, because we think we deserve it. Atterbury.

Universal gravitation is above all mechanism, and proceeds from a divine energy and impression. Bentley.

There is a real knowledge of material things, when the thing itself, and the real action and impression thereof on our senses, is perceived. Cheyne.

5. Effect of an attack.

Such a defeat of near two hundred horse, seconded with two thousand foot, may surely endure a comparison with any of the bravest impressions in ancient times. Wotton.

6. Edition; number printed at once; one course of printing.

To be distracted with many opinions, makes men to be of the last impression, and full of change. Bacon.

For ten impressions, which his works have had in so many years, at present a hundred books are scarcely purchased once a twelvemonth. Dryden.

IMPRE'SSIVE.* adj. [from impress.]

1. Capable of being impressed; susceptible.

A soft and impressive fancy. Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 75.

No men more subject to such delusions, than men of devout affections, if of strong fancies, impressive tempers, and weak intellectuals. Spencer, Van. of Vulg. Proph. p. 70.

2. Capable of making impression; as, an impressive discourse.

IMPRE'SSIVELY.* adv. [from impressive.] In a powerful or impressive manner.

IMPRE'SSIVENESS.* n. s. [from impressive.] The quality of being impressive.

IMPRE'SSURE. n. s. [from impress.] The mark made by pressure; the dint; the impression.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspeare, As you like it.

I'MPREST.* n. s. [imprestanza, Ital. from imprestare, to lend or give before hand.] A kind of earnest money; money advanced; a loan.

IMPRE'VALENCY.* n. s. [in and prevalence.] Incapability of prevailing.

That nothing can separate God's elect from his everlasting love, he proves it by induction of the most powerful agents, and triumphs in the impotence and imprevalency of them all. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 276

*IMPRIMA'TUR. n. s. [Latin.] A word formerly at the beginning of books, signifying let it be printed; a licence to print.

Sometimes five imprimaturs are seen together dialogue-wise in the piatza of one title-page. Milton, Areopagitica.

With what zeal and outrage have you asserted its [the press's] liberty from the bondage of imprimaturs, and the inquisition of prelates! Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transpr. p. 191.

Thus shall my title pass a sacred seal,
Receive an imprimatur from above,
While angels shout, An infidel reclaim'd! Young, Night Th. 7.

IMPRI'MERY.* n. s. [Fr. imprimerie.] A print, or impression; also a printing-house, or the art of printing. Coles.

She amidst his spacious meadows flows;
Inclines her urn upon his fatten'd lands,
And sees his num'rous herds imprint her sands. Prior.

2. To stamp words upon paper by the use of types.

One of the said books so translated and imprinted may be had for every cathedral. Act for Unif. of Pub. Prayers, 14 Ch. II. ch. iv.

3. To fix on the mind or memory.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages, amongst compliments, which is of singular use. Bacon.

We have all those ideas in our understandings which we can make the objects of our thoughts, without the help of those sensible qualities which first imprinted them. Locke.

Retention is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas, which, after imprinting, have disappeared. Locke.

By familiar acquaintance he has got the ideas of those two different things distinctly imprinted on his mind. Locke.

4. To IMPRINT in is less proper.

When we set before our eyes a round globe, the idea imprinted in our mind is of a flat circle, variously shadowed. Locke.

I'MPRINT.* n. s. Designation of place, where a work is printed; "the imprint, as it is called in technical language, "E Typographeo Clarendoniano," or "At the Clarendon Press." Brit. Crit. Feb. 1790.

To IMPRI'SON. v. a. [emprisonner, Fr. in and prison.] To shut up; to confine; to keep from liberty; to restrain in place.

He imprison'd was in chains remediless;
For that Hippolytus' rent corse he did redress. Spenser, F. Q.

Now we are in the street, he first of all,
Improvidently proud, creeps to the wall;
And so imprison'd and hemm'd in by me,
Sells for a little state his liberty. Donne.

Try to imprison the resistless wind;
So swift is guilt, so hard to be confin'd. Dryden.

If a man imprisons himself in his closet, and employs reason to find out the nature of the corporeal world, without experiments, he will frame a scheme of chimeras. Watts.

It is not improbable, that all the virtual heat in the juices of vegetables, metals, and minerals may be owing to the action of the imprisoned rays. Cheyne.

IMPRI'SONMENT. n. s. [emprisonnement, Fr. from imprison.] Confinement; clausure; state of being shut in prison. It may be written emprisonment.

His sinews waxen weak and raw,
Through long imprisonment and hard constraint. Spenser, F. Q.

Which shall I first bewail,
Thy bondage or lost sight?
Thou art become, O worst imprisonment!
The dungeon of thyself. Milton, S. A.

From retentive cage
When sullen Philomel escapes, her notes
She varies, and of past imprisonment
Sweetly complains. Philips.

The magistrate is wont to ingross and impropriate this scripture to himself. Hales, Rem. p. 130.

2. To put the possessions of the church into the hands of laicks.

Those impropriated livings, which have now no settled endowment, and are therefore called not vicarages, but perpetual or sometimes arbitrary curacies; they are such, as belonged formerly to those orders who could serve the cure of them in their own persons, as the canons regular of the order of St. Austin; which being afterwards devolved into the hands of laymen, they hired poor curates to serve them, at the cheapest rate they could. Wharton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, (1693,) p. 67.

IMPRO'PRIATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Devolved into the hands of laicks.

Mrs. Gulston being possessed of the impropriate parsonage of Bardwell in Suffolk, did procure from the king leave to annex the same to the vicarage. Spelman.

IMPROPRIA'TION.† n. s. [from impropriate.]

1. Exclusive possession.

The Gnosticks had, as they deemed, the impropriation of all divine knowledge. Loe, Bliss of Br. Beauty, (1614,) p. 29.

2. Alienation of the possessions of the church.

An impropriation is properly so called when the church land is in the hands of a layman; and an appropriation is when it is in the hands of a bishop, college, or religious house, though sometimes these terms are confounded. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Having an impropriation in his estate, he took a course to dispose of it for the augmentation of the vicarage. Spelman.

IMPRO'PRIATOR.† n. s. [from impropriate.]

1. One who seizes to himself.

I should condemn any man for a most unconscionable incloser and impropriator, that should take upon himself to give another leave to speak or write this or the like, which is as common for every one as the air which we breathe. Dean Martin's Letters, (1662,) p. 23.

2. A layman that has the possession of the lands of the church.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tythes to the rector or impropriator. Ayliffe, Parergon.

IMPROPRI'ETY.† n. s. [impropriété, Fr. from improprius, Lat. Anciently our word was improperty; as property was also used for propriety. "Improperty, when a word is brought into the talke having nothyng at al his owne proper signification." Sherrye, &c. fol. vi. b.] Unfitness; unsuitableness; inaccuracy; want of justness.

These mighty ones, whose ambition could suffer them to be called gods, would never be flattered into immortality; but the proudest have been convinced of the impropriety of that appellation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Many gross improprieties, however authorized by practice, ought to be discarded. Swift.

IMPROSPE'RITY.* n. s. [in and prosperity.] Unhappiness.

Some relicks of this feud—were long after the causes of the one family's almost utter extinction, and of the other's improsperity. Naunton, Fragment. Regal. Knowles.

IMPRO'SPEROUS. adj. [in and prosperous.] Unhappy; unfortunate; not successful.

This method is in the design probable, how improsperous soever the wickedness of men hath rendered the success of it. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Our pride seduces us at once into the guilt of bold, and punishment of improsperous rebels. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Seven revolving years are wholly run,
Since the improsperous voyage we begun. Dryden, Æn.

IMPRO'SPEROUSLY.† adv. [from improsperous.] Unhappily; unluckily; unsuccessfully; with ill fortune.

Thus like a rose by some unkindly blast,
'Mongst many buds that round about it grow,
The withering leaves improsperously doth cast,
Whilst all the rest their sovereign beauties shew:
Amidst this goodly sisterhood even so,
Nipt with cold death untimely did I fade. Drayton, Legend of Matilda.

This experiment has been but very improsperously attempted. Boyle.

IMPRO'SPEROUSNESS.* n. s. [from improsperous.] Unhappiness; ill fortune.

That the improsperousness, ruin, perhaps of a whole kingdom, should be imputable to one such sin. Hammond, Works, iv. 513.

The effect of these threatenings of God we daily see in the strange improsperousness of ill gotten estates. Whole Duty of Man, xii. § 19.

IMPROVABI'LITY.* n. s. [from improvable.] Capability of improvement.

IMPRO'VABLE. adj. [from improve.] Capable of being advanced from a good to a better state; capable of melioration.

Adventures in knowledge are laudable, and the essays of weaker heads afford improvable hints unto better. Brown.

We have stock enough, and that too of so improvable a nature, that is, capable of infinite advance ent. Decay of Piety.

Man is accommodated with moral principles, improvable by the exercise of his faculties. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Animals are not improvable beyond their proper genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew.

I have a fine spread of improvable lands, and am already planting woods and draining marshes. Addison, Spect.

IMPRO'VABLENESS.† n. s. [from improvable.] Capableness of being made better.

Of the improvableness of attrition into contrition. Hammond, Works, i. 479.

IMPRO'VABLY. adv. [from improvable.] In a manner that admits of melioration.

To IMPRO'VE.† v. a. [in and probus: "Quasi probum facere." Skinner.]

1. To advance any thing nearer to perfection; to raise from good to better. We amend a bad, but improve a good thing. Dr. Johnson.—But it is also used in the general meaning of augmentation, without any reference to perfection. See the next sense.

I love not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead. Denham.

Heaven seems improv'd with a superior ray,
And the bright arch reflects a double day. Pope.

2. To augment; to encrease. Not noticed by any of our lexicographers.

Some unhappy suits in law, and waste of his fortune in those suits, made some impression upon his mind, which being improved by domestick afflictions, and those indulgences to himself which naturally attend those afflictions, rendered his age less reverenced than his youth had been. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 32.

This ill principle, which being thus habitually improved, and from personal corruptions spreading into general and national, is the cause of all the mischiefs and disorders, publick and private, which trouble and infest the world, is to be altered and corrected only by discipline. South, Serm. v. 17.

3. [In and prove; improuver, Fr. improbo, Lat.] To disprove; to censure. Now disused.

Though the prophet Jeremy was unjustly accused, yet doth not that improve any thing that I have said. Whitgift.

To IMPRO'VE. v. n. To advance in goodness.

We take care to improve in our frugality and diligence; virtues which become us, particularly in times of war. Atterbury.

IMPRO'VEMENT.† n. s. [from improve. Norm. Fr. improwment.]

1. Melioration; advancement of any thing from good to better.

Some virtues tend to the preservation of health, and others to the improvement and security of estates. Tillotson.

2. Act of improving; something added or changed for the better: sometimes with on.

The parts of Sinon, Camilla, and some few others, are improvements on the Greek poet. Addison, Spect.

3. Progress from good to better.

There is a design of publishing the history of architecture, with its several improvements and decays. Addison.

4. Progress in any respect; encrease.

When the corruption of men's manners, by the habitual improvement of this vicious principle, comes from personal to be general and universal, so as to diffuse and spread itself over a whole community; it naturally and directly tends to the ruin and subversion of the government, where it so prevails. South, Serm. v. 17.

5. Instruction; edification.

I look upon your city as the best place of improvement: from the school we go to the university, but from the universities to London. South.

6. Effect of melioration.

Love is the greatest of human affections, and friendship the noblest and most refined improvement of love. South.

IMPRO'VER. n. s. [from improve.]

1. One that makes himself or any thing else better.

They were the greatest improvers of those qualifications with which courts used to be adorned. Clarendon.

The first started ideas have been examined, and many effectually confuted by the late improvers of this way. Locke.

Homer is like a skilful improver, who places a beautiful statue so as to answer several vistas. Pope.

2. Any thing that meliorates.

Chalk is a very great improver of most lands. Mortimer.

IMPROVI'DED. adj. [improvisus, Lat. imprevu, Fr.] Unforeseen; unexpected; unprovided against.

She suborned hath
This crafty messenger with letters vain,
To work new woe, and improvided scath,
By breaking off the band betwixt us twain. Spenser.

IMPRO'VIDENCE. n. s. [from improvident.] Want of forethought; want of caution.

Men would escape floods by running up to mountains; and though some might perish through improvidence, many would escape. Hale.

The improvidence of my neighbour must not make me inhuman. L'Estrange.

IMPRO'VIDENT. adj. [improvidus, Lat.] Wanting forecast; wanting care to provide.

Improvident soldiers, had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fall'n. Shakspeare.

When men well have fed, the blood being warm,
Then are they most improvident of harm. Daniel.

I shall conclude this digression, and return to the time when that brisk and improvident resolution was taken. Clarendon.

This were an improvident revenge in the young ones, whereby they must destroy themselves. Brown.

IMPRO'VIDENTLY.† adv. [from improvident.] Without forethought; without care.

Distracted in her course, improvidently rash.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

Now we are in the street, he first of all,
Improvidently proud, creeps to the wall;
And so imprison'd, and hemm'd in by me,
Sells for a little state his liberty. Donne, Poems, p. 120.

We, in the stupidity of atheistical hearts, are so improvidently covetous. Hammond, Works, iv. 674.

IMPRÓVI'SION. n. s. [in and provision.] Want of forethought.

Her improvision would be justly accusable. Brown.

IMPRU'DENCE.† n. s. [imprudence, Fr. imprudentia, Lat.] Want of prudence; indiscretion; negligence; inattention to interest.

Where good with bad were match'd, who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milton, P. L.

IMPRU'DENT. adj. [imprudent, Fr. imprudens, Lat.] Wanting prudence; injudicious; indiscreet; negligent.

There is no such imprudent person as he that neglects God and his soul. Tillotson.

IMPRU'DENTLY.* adv. [from imprudent.] Without prudence; indiscreetly. Sherwood.

I'MPUDENCE.† } n. s. [impudence, Fr. impudentia,
I'MPUDENCY. } Lat. "Impudence in an Englishman is sullen and insolent; in a Scotchman it is untractable and rapacious; in an Irishman, absurd and fawning." Spect. No. 20.] Shamelessness; immodesty.

I ne'er heard yet
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

A woman, if she maintain her husband, is full of anger, impudency, and much reproach. Ecclus. xxv. 22.

Nor did Noah's infirmity justify Cham's impudency, or exempt him from that curse of being servant of servants.
King Charles.

Those clear truths, that either their own evidence forces us to admit, or common experience makes it impudence to deny.
Locke.

I'MPUDENT. adj. [impudent, Fr. impudens, Lat.]

1. Shameless; wanting modesty.

It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sawciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

When we behold an angel, not to fear,
Is to be impudent. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. Unchaste; immodest.

I'MPUDENTLY. adv. [from impudent.] Shamelessly; without modesty.

At once assail
With open mouths, and impudently rail. Sandys.

Why should soft Fabius impudently bear
Names gain'd by conquest in the Gallick war?
Why lays he claim to Hercules his strain,
Yet dares be base, effeminate, and vain? Dryden.

IMPUDI'CITY.* n. s. [impudicité, Fr. impudicitia, Lat.] Immodesty.

They are so unacquainted with Rome's impurities and impudicities. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616,) p. 18.

That usual pride, levity, or impudicity, which they observed or suspected in many. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 115.

To IMPU'GN.† v. a. [impugner, Fr. impugno, Lat.] To attack; to assault by law or argument; to oppose; to resist.

You say, that in the olde church the truth of this mistery was never impugned openly.
Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 203.

To knights of great emprise
The charge of Justice given was in trust,
That they might execute her judgements wise,
And with their might beat downe licentious Lust,
Which proudly did impugne her sentence just. Spenser, F. Q.

Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Wise and careful commanders do not only cast how to impugne, oppress, and annoy an enemy, but also how to remove those helps which might be advantageous to him in his siege.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 248.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw one of these in his time; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham on Drawing.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness; and that not only in matters of moment and business, but also of recreation, which is impugned by some, though better defended by others. South.

IMPUGNA'TION.* n. s. [from impugn. Fr. impugnation.] Opposition; resistance.

The fifth is a perpetual impugnation, and self-conflict; either part labouring to oppose and vanquish the other.
Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 18.

IMPU'GNER.† n. s. [from impugn.] One that attacks or invades.

To defend them from the pretended slanders of their impugners. Fulke against Allen, (1586,) p. 354.

Leaving excuseless those his wilful impugners.
Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

IMPUI'SSANCE. n. s. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakness; feebleness.

As he would not trust Ferdinando and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impuissance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon, Hen. VII.

I'MPULSE.† n. s. [impulsus, Lat. Formerly the accent was on the last syllable; it is now constantly on the first.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.

If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea impressed.

Mean time, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible.
Dryden.

Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPU'LSION.† n. s. [impulsion, Fr. impulsus, Lat.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The first beginning of all those motions, so moved by others, can be nothing else but only the impulsion of that one first Mover, which moveth of himself. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 225.

Influences, impulsions, or inclinations, — from the lights above. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 7.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

My keeper with compassion mov'd to see,
How grief's impulsions in my breast did beate,
Thus silence broke. Mir. for Mag. p. 652.

But thou didst plead
Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st
Find some occasion to infest our foes. Milton, S. A.

He always opposed, upon the impulsion of conscience, all mutations in the church. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 97.

IMPU'LSIVE. adj. [impulsif, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
But those being placed in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion
Against their proper course. Denham, Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they
Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPU'LSIVE.* n. s. Impellent cause or reason.

Notwithstanding all which motives and impulsives, Sir Thomas Overbury refused to be sent abroad. Wotton, Rem. p. 409.

IMPU'LSIVELY.* adv. [from impulsive.] By impulse.

The two ladies seemed much affected, and impulsively at the same time they both put their hands into their pockets. Sterne.

IMPU'NIBLY.* adv. [from impunity.] Without punishment.

Xenophon represents the opinion of Socrates, that — no man impunibly violates a law established by the gods. Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 65.

IMPU'NITY. n. s. [impunité, Fr. impunitas, Lat.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison, Freeholder.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPU'RE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Lat.]

1. Defiled with guilt; unholy: of men.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

2. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy: of things.

Hypocrites austerely talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton, P. L.

3. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakspeare.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Feculent: foul with extraneous mixtures; drossy.

To IMPU'RE.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To render foul or impure; to defile.

That other inundation scoured the world, this impures it. Bp. Hall, Serm. Works, ii. 269.

3. Base admixture.

The impureness of mixed posterity. Feltham, Res. i. 85.

4. Feculent admixture.

Cleanse the alimentary duct by vomiting and clysters; the impurities of which will be carried into the blood. Arbuthnot.

To IMPU'RPLE.† v. a. [imporporare, Ital. empourprer, Fr. See To EMPURPLE. But our old lexicography writes it impurple. See Sherwood's Dict.] To make red; to colour as with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,

IMPU'TABLE.† adj. [from impute.]

1. Chargeable upon any one; that of which one may be accused.

It is rather imputable to that prudent modesty, which so much becomes every sober woman. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 168.

That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South.

2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.

If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony; for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in nowise imputable. Ayliffe, Parergon.

IMPU'TABLENESS. n. s. [from imputable.] The quality of being imputable.

'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.

IMPUTA'TION. n. s. [imputation, Fr. from impute.]

1. Attribution of any thing; generally of ill.

Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandize, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakspeare.

To use intellections and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanville Scepsis.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens, they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Antonio is a good man.
— Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
— No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

IMPU'TATIVE.† adj. [from impute.] That may impute.

In all things righteousness, acceptation, or sanctification, is free and imputative. Tr. of Bullinger's Serm. p. 1052.

The fourth is the imputative righteousness of Christ, either exploded or not rightly understood. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull.

To IMPU'TE. v. a. [imputer, Fr. imputo, Lat.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom, iv. 22.

Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived, for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and impairs others; and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon, Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.

This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst, called a dissertation on parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton, P. L.

IMPU'TER.† n. s. [from impute.] He that imputes. Sherwood.

IN.† prep. [in, Lat. in, Sax. in, Gothick.]

1. Noting the place where any thing is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise, Fairfax.

Is this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel, Civil Wars.

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by errour and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shakspeare.

Sir Edmond Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shakspeare.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant, is great. Daniel, Civil Wars.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism. Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Smalridge, Serm.

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Dunciad.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past? Locke.

4. Noting power.

To feed men's souls, quoth he, is not in man. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

5. Noting proportion.

Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current, Bacon.

8. For the sake. A solemn phrase.

Now in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Now in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death revenged Dryden.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shakspeare.

10. Formerly in the sense of on; which was a common usage, and continued in Milton's time. Wicliffe and Chaucer so use it.

But she againe him in the shield did smite. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 16.

And in his necke
Her proud foot setting. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 40.

All who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory. Milton, P. L. iii. 448.

11. IN that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with errour. Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search. Shakspeare.

12. IN as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would. Hooker.

IN. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falshood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacredest bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South.

I fear me, you'll be in till then. Shakspeare.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:
We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Daniel.

These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakspeare.

Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in? Pope.

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shakspeare.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't; I'll in, I'll in; follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Winds.

5. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryden.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm? Collier.

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

7. IN has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

Inabi'lity. n. s. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to inure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

Ina'bstinence. n. s. [in and abstinence.] Intemperance; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve
Shall bring on man. Milton, P. L.

Inabu'sively.* adv. [in and abusively.] Without abuse.

A state of mortality shall always want that infinite wisdom, and purity of intention which resideth in the Deity, and which makes power to consist inabusively only there, as in its proper sphere. Ld. North, Light in the Way to Paradise, (1682,) p. 91.

Inaccessibi'lity.* n. s. [from inaccessible.] State of being inaccessible.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven, needs no art to fortify it, nature having supplied that with the inaccessibility of the precipice. Butler, Rem. i. 417.

INACCE'SSIBLE. adj. [inaccessible, Fr. in and accessible.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.

Whate'r you are,
That in this desart inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakspeare.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

There shall we see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtile for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of. Ray.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.

Inacce'ssibly.* adv. [from inaccessible.] So as not to be approached.

Mr. Bryant supposes that this piece of recondite northern mythology was inaccessibly shut up in Spelman, Asser, &c. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 61.

Ina'ccuracy.† n. s. [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.

It does not then proceed from any peculiar irregularity, or difficulty of our language, that the general practice, both of speaking and writing it, is chargeable with inaccuracy. Lowth.

[There are] two small inaccuracies in this sentence. Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 512.

INA'CCURATE.† adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

The expression is plainly inaccurate. Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 315.

Leland is also inaccurate at least, in representing the edition by Thynne as coming next after that by Caxton. Tyrwhitt on Chaucer.

Ina'ccurately.* adv. [from inaccurate.] Not correctly.

What may be used as an argument? Why, either the allegorical persons, or the beauty they have in such compositions. Very inaccurately expressed, take it which way you will. Hurd on Addison's Spect. No. 273.

Ina'ction.† n. s. [inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.

Ferments of the worst kind succeed to perfect inaction. Bp. Berkeley, Maxims, § 38.

INA'CTIVE.† adj. [in and active.]

1. Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

His [Rowe's] plays are musical and pleasing poems; but inactive and unmoving tragedies. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

Others are — doomed to lose four months in inactive obscurity. Johnson, Rambler, No. 124.

2. Unfavourable to activity.

Not the vain visions of inactive schools,
Not fancy's maxims, not opinion's rules,
E'er form'd the man, whose gen'rous warmth extends
T' enrich his country. Shenstone.

Ina'ctively. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.

Inacti'vity. n. s. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.

To INA'CTUATE. v. a. [from actuate.] To put into action.

The plastick in them is too highly awakened, to inactuate only an aerial body. Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 125.

Inactua'tion.* n. s. [from inactuate.] Operation.

They [the creatures] were then constituted in the inactuation and exercise of their noblest and most perfect powers. Glanville. Pre-exist. p. 113.

INA'DEQUATE. adj. [in and adæquatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remorse for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct? Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

Ina'dequately. adv. [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

Ina'dequateness.* n. s. [from inadequate.] Defect of proportion.

That may be collected generally from the inadequateness of the visible means to most notable productions. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

Inadequa'tion.* n. s. [in and adequation,] Want of exact correspondence.

The difference only arising from inadequation of languages. Cit. in Puller's Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 418.

Inadmi'ssible.* adj. [Fr. inadmissible; an old word in that language; but, in ours, of modern date. Mr. Malone attributes the introduction of it to William Pitt, first Earl of Chatham.] Not to be allowed, or admitted.

It must always be remembered, that bishop Lowth's version is designed for the learned: in one for vulgar use "sorec" for "choice vine," "ilex" for "green oak," &c. would be clearly inadmissible. Abp. Newcome, Ess. on Bibl. Transl. p. 303.

Inadve'rtence. } Inadve'rtency. } n. s. [inadvertence, French; from inadvertent.]

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a difference between them, as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present, that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertence or indiscretion. Gov. of the Tongue.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.

INADVE'RTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.

INADVE'RTENTLY. adv. [from inadvertent.] Carelessly; negligently.

Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Circe and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Richardson, Clarissa.

INADVE'RTISEMENT.* n. s. [in and advertisement.] Inadvertence.

Constant objects lose their hints, and steal an inadvertisement, upon us. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.

INAFFABI'LITY.* n. s. [from inaffable.] Reservedness in conversation. Coles.

INA'FFABLE.* adj. [in and affable.] Reserved; sour; uncourteous; unpleasant in conversation. See AFFABLE. Scott.

INAFFECTA'TION.* n. s. [in and affectation.] The state of being void of affectation. Scott.

INAFFE'CTEDLY.* adv. [from inaffected.] Without affectation; "inaffectedly, done carelessly." Not in use. Cockeram.

INA'IDABLE.* adj. [from in and aid.] Not to be assisted.

Labouring art can never answer nature
From her inaidable estate. Shakspeare, All's Well.

INA'LIENABLE.† adj. [inalienable, old Fr.] That cannot be alienated, or granted to another.

This grant or concession was made originally upon condition, that the said lands should be inalienable.
Hist. Descript. of the Kingdom of Macasar, (1701,) p. 88.

It [the land] was not originally inalienable.
Burke, Speech in Parl. (1772.)

INA'LIENABLENESS.* n. s. [from the adjective.] The state of being inalienable. Scott.

INALIME'NTAL. adj. [in and alimental.] Affording no nourishment.

Dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.

INA'LTERABLE.* adj. [in and alterable.] Not to be changed or altered.

The heavens—being made of an incorruptible and inalterable quintessence. Hakewill on Providence, p. 75.

INA'MIABLE.* adj. [in and amiable.] Unpleasant; not to be beloved. Cockeram.

INA'MIABLENESS.* n. s. [from inamiable.] Unloveliness; the want of amiable qualities. Scott.

INAMI'SSIBLE.† adj. [inamissible, French; in and amissus, Lat.] Not to be lost.

INAMI'SSIBLENESS.* n. s. [from inamissible.] The state of being inamissible. Scott.

INAMORA'TO.* n. s. [Ital. innamorato.] One in love. See ENAMORADO. It appears to have once had the English form of inamorate; for thus Cockeram gives it, in his old vocabulary, "inamorates, lovers." But inamorato has kept its ground down to our own times. It is usually a contemptuous expression.

Perfum'd inamoratoes!
Marston, Scourge of Villainy, (1599,) iii. 10.

All pretty fellows are also excluded to a man, as well as all inamoratoes. Tatler, No. 27.

Distracted inamoratos, either spiritual or sensual.
Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Methodists, vol. i. p. 57.

We are both worshippers and inamoratos of this mother of the gods, antiquity. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 199.

INA'NE. adj. [inanis, Latin.] Empty; void. It is used licentiously for a substantive.

We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.

To INA'NIMATE.† v. a. [in and animo, Latin.] To animate; to quicken. This word is not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the poetical passage from Donne. Donne, however, was fond of the word.

There's a kind of world remaining still;
Though she, which did inanimate and fill
The world, be gone, yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light.
Donne, Poems, p. 204.

This child of mine, inanimated by your gracious acceptation.
Donne, Devot. Epist. Dedic.

Youth is their critical day, that judges them, that denominates them, that inanimates and informs them.
Donne, Devot. p. 338.

INA'NIMATE. } adj. [inanimatus, Latin: inanimé,
INA'NIMATED. } French.] Void of life; without animation.

The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon.

The golden goddess, present at the prayer,
Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.

Both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimated part of the universe.
Cheyne, Philos. Princip.

From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.

INANIMA'TION.* n. s. [from To inanimate.] Animation. Not usual.

We may well consider the body, before the soul came, before inanimation, to be without sin. Donne, Devot. p. 581.

INANI'TION.† n. s. [inanition, Fr. inanis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.

Repletion and inanition may both do harm in two contrary extremes. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.

Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanition in the latter end of the disease. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INA'NITY.† n. s. [inanité, Fr. inanis, Lat.]

1. Emptiness; void space.

This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities, but so little ones as nobody whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide. Digby on Bodies.

2. Vanity.

These fopperies are the chief of the effect. — Their inanity gives them weight and credit.
Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 42.

INA'PPETENCE.* n. s. [in and appetence.] Want of appetite.

Some squeamish and disrelished person takes a long walk to the physician's lodging to beg some remedy for his inappetence.
Boyle against Custom. Swear. p. 106.

INA'PPETENCY.† n. s. [in and appetentia, Lat.] Want of stomach or appetite. Sherwood.

INA'PPLICABLE. adj. [in and applicable.] Not to be put to a particular use.

INAPPLICABI'LITY. n. s. [from inapplicable.] Unfitness for the particular purpose.

INAPPLICA'TION. n. s. [inapplication, Fr. in and application.] Indolence; negligence.

INA'PPOSITE.* adj. [in and apposite.] Ill placed; ill timed; not to the purpose.

INAPPREHE'NSIBLE.* adj. [in and apprehensible.] Not intelligible.

Those celestial songs to others inapprehensible, but not to those who were not defiled with women. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

INAPPREHE'NSIVE.* adj. [in and apprehensive.] Not noticing; regardless.

By faring deliciously every day men become senseless of the evils of mankind, inapprehensive of the troubles of their brethren, unconcerned in the changes of the world, and the cries of the poor, the hunger of the fatherless, and the thirst of widows. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653,) p. 206.

INA'PTITUDE.* n. s. [in and aptitude.] Unfitness.

Hereby one may give a strong conjecture of the aptness or inaptitude of one's capacity to that study. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1619,) i. i. 9.

INA'QUATE.* adj. [in and aquatus, Lat.] Embodied in water. Not in use.

For as muche as he is joyned to the bread but sacramentally, there followeth no impanation thereof, no more than the Holy Ghost is inaquate, that is to say, made water, beyng sacramentally joyned to the water in baptisme. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 368.

INAQUA'TION.* n. s. [from inaquate.] The state of being inaquate.

The second reason is almost as fondly handled, alludyng from impanation to inaquation. Bp. Gardiner, Repl. to Abp. Cranmer, p. 369.

INA'RABLE. adj. [in and arabilis, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Dict.

To INA'RCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined, the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTI'CULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness, like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn musick, which is inarticulate poesy, does in churches. Dryden.

INARTI'CULATELY.† adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.

Whispered inarticulately in our hearts. Hammond, Works, iv. 497.

INARTI'CULATENESS. n. s. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.

INARTICULA'TION.* n. s. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; indistinctness in pronouncing.

The oracles meaned to be obscure: but then it was by the ambiguity of the expression, and not by the inarticulation of the words. Ld. Chesterfield.

INARTIFI'CIAL.† adj. [in and artificial.]

1. Contrary to art.

I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also. Decay of Piety.

2. Not made by art; plain; simple; artless; rude.

It was the inartificial process of the experiment, and not the acuteness of any commentary upon it, which they have had in veneration. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 91.

Words of such amazing force and comprehension, [St. Matt. vi. 6—9.] and at the same time of such a wonderful and inartificial simplicity, as must convince the most hardened infidel, would he give himself leave thoroughly to attend to them, of that divine spirit and wisdom, by which the author of them most unquestionably spake. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

If poetry be compared with painting, in respect of this its merely natural and inartificial resemblance. Harris on Musick, Poetry, &c. iii. § 2.

Petty barbarian states, intent only on repelling their neighbours or enlarging their territories, unfurnished with arts or letters, and, from their natural ferocity, cherishing the most violent jealousies, and destitute of the principles of mutual confidence, possessed no other mode of adjusting their differences, and securing their frontiers, than to construct these inartificial bulwarks, serving at once for division and defence, planned on the simplest mechanism, and executed by the mere strength of tumultuary multitudes. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 64.

INARTIFI'CIALLY. adv. [from inartificial.] Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when it is affected by those of a self-denying profession. Collier.

INATTE'NTION. n. s. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect; heedlessness.

Persons keep out of the reach of the reproofs of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect. Rogers.

We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect. Rogers.

Novel lays attract our ravish'd ears;
But old, the mind with inattention hears. Pope.

INATTE'NTIVE. adj. [in and attentive.] Heedless; careless; negligent; regardless.

If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit. Watts.

INATTE'NTIVELY.* adv. [from inattentive.] Without attention; heedlessly.

INAU'DIBLE. adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees

Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakspeare.

To INAU'GURATE.† v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.

Those beginnings of years were very propitious unto him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear acts as well of the times as of the will. Wotton, Life of D. of Buck.

He had taken with him Alfred, his youngest son, to be there inaugurated. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

INAU'GURATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Invested with office.

Edmond ——
At London caus'd himself inaugurate to be. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

INAUGURA'TION. n. s. [inauguration, Fr. inauguro, Latin.] Investiture by solemn rites.

The royal olive was solemnly sworn, at his inauguration, to observe these things inviolable. Howell, Voc. For.

At his regal inauguration his old father resigned the kingdom to him. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INAU'GURATORY.* adj. [from inaugurate.] Respecting inauguration.

After so many inauguratory gratulations, nuptial hymns, and funeral dirges, he must be highly favoured by nature, or by fortune, who says any thing not said before. Johnson, Life of Dryden.

INAURA'TION. n. s. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INAU'SPICATE.* adj. [in and auspicate. See To AUSPICATE.] Ill omened.

Though it bore an inauspicate face, it proved of a friendly event. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 43.

INAUSPI'CIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here
I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Though Heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity,
Her eye a strong appeal can give;
Beauty, smiles, and love shall live. Crashaw.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces. Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair. Dryden.

INAUSPI'CIOUSLY.* adv. [from inauspicious.] With ill omens; with bad fortune.

INAUSPI'CIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from inauspicious.] The state or quality of being inauspicious. Scott.

INBE'ING. n. s. [in and being.] Inherence; inseparableness.

When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, these are proper or inherent modes; for they have a sort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it. Watts.

I'NBORN.† adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

These not ingrav'd, but inborn dignities,
Caskets of souls. Donne, Poems, p. 160.

Led by sense of good,
Inborn to all, I sought my needful food. Dryden.

All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them. Dryden.

Some Carolina, to Heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee. Addison.

INBRE'ATHED. adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair of syrens, pledges of Heav'n's joy,
Sphere-born harmonious sisters, Voice and Verse,
Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ,
Dead things with imbreath'd sense able to pierce. Milton, Ode.

I'NBRED.† adj. [in and bred.] Produced within; hatched or generated within.

That other inward inbred cause of melancholy, is our temperature, in whole or part, which we receive from our parents. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 60.

The inbred delight or pleasure in secular vanities. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 542.

My inbred enemy
Forth issu'd. Milton, P. L.

A man thinks better of his children than they deserve; but there is an impulse of tenderness, and there must be some esteem for the setting of that inbred affection at work. L'Estrange.

But he unmov'd contemns their idle threat;
And inbred worth doth boasting valour slight. Dryden.

To INBRE'ED.* v. a. [from breed.] To produce; to raise.

It is inbred, and an impressed belief in all, that our souls have a divine original. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 32.

These abilities — are of power, beside the office of a pulpit, to inbreed and cherish in a great people the seeds of virtue and publick civility. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

To inbreed in us this generous and christianly reverence one of another. Ibid.

To INCA'GE.† v. a. [in and cage. Fr. encager. See To ENCAGE.] To coop up; to shut up; to confine in a cage, or any narrow space.

Wiseman.

To INCA'RNADINE.† v. a. [incarnadin, Fr. incarnadino, pale red, Italian.] To dye red. This word I find only once, Dr. Johnson says, citing the example from Shakspeare. A writer, soon after Shakspeare, uses it as a verb; and another, as an adjective.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
The multitudinous sea incarnadine,
Making the green one red. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

One shall ensphere thine eyes, another shall
Impearl thy teeth, a third thy white and small
Hand shall besnow, a fourth incarnadine
Thy rosie cheek. Carew's Poems, p. 95

Inca'rnadine.* adj. [incarnadino, Ital.] Of a red colour.

Such whose white-sattin upper coat of skin,

In mirrours there is the like angle of incidence, from the object to the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidency of his happiness. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton, Opticks.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [Incidens, Lat.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declare,
Is creeping towards me. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

I'NCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incidens, Lat.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

I'NCIDENT. n. s. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon, Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

INCIDE'NTAL. adj. Incident; casual; happening by chance; not intended; not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those incidental discourses which we have wandered into. Milton.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incidental business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers.

INCIDE'NTALLY. adv. [from incidental.] Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and incidentally mentioned in Scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderson.

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colours. Boyle.

I'NCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the bye; by the way.

It was incidently moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attainted; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To INCI'NERATE. v. a. [in and cineres, Lat.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat indurateth, then maketh fragile; lastly, it doth incinerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and incinerate. Bacon.

These dregs are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Harvey on Consumptions.

INCINERA'TION.† n. s. [incineration, Fr. from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

The phenix kinde,
Of whose incineration,
There riseth a new creation. Skelton, Poems, p. 230.

Those quartans are of all the most obstinate, which arise out of the incineration of a former ague. Wotton, Rem. p. 470.

I observed in the fixt salt of urine, brought by depuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very different from the caustick lixiviate taste of other salts made by incineration. Boyle.

INCI'PIENCY.* n. s. [from incipient.] Beginning; commencement.

INCI'PIENT.* adj. [incipiens, Lat.] Commencing.

Certainly in any sense, a second or third fluxion seems an obscure mystery. The incipient celerity of an incipient celerity, the nascent argument of a nascent argument, i. e. of a thing which hath no magnitude, &c. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 4.

In their incipient state all are upon a footing. Goldsmith, Hist. of the Earth.

To INCI'RCLE.* See To ENCIRCLE. Sherwood.

INCI'RCLET.* n. s. [from incircle.] A small circle.

In whose incirclets if ye gaze,
Your eyes may tread a lover's maze. Sidney, Arc. b. 2.

INCIRCUMSCRI'PTIBLE.* adj. [in and circumscriptible.] Not to be bound or confined.

When thou speakest of God, thou muste consyder a thynge that in nature is single, without composition, without conversion; that is invisible, immortall, incircumscriptible, incomprehensible. Abp. Cranmer, Answer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 343.

INCIRCUMSPE'CTION. n. s. [in and circumspection.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To INCI'SE.* v. a. [inciser, Fr. incisus, Lat.] To cut; to engrave; to carve.

If Truth's hand
Incise the story of our land,
Posterity shall see a fair
Structure. Carew's Poems, p. 79.

Let others carve the rest; it shall suffice,
I on thy grave this epitaph incise. Ibid. p. 104.

Nor had his love to any (had not stone
And stocks discover'd it,) been ever known;
Which, (for on them he us'd his plaints t' incise,)
By chance presented it to Sylvia's eyes. Sherburn, Transl. from St. Amant.

INCI'SED. adj. [inciser, Fr. incisus, Lat.] Cut; made by cutting: as, an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Wiseman, Surgery.

INCI'SION. n. s. [incision, Fr. incisio, Lat.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a chirurgeon.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine. Shakspeare.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Abstersion is a scouring off, or incision of viscous humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen. Bacon.

INCI'SIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors. Boyle.

INCI'SOR.† n. s. [incisor, Lat.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.

The incisors of the upper jaw are larger and broader than those of the lower. Berdmore on the Teeth.

INCI'SORY. adj. [incisoire, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCI'SURE. n. s. [incisura, Lat.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food. Derham.

INCITA'TION.† n. s. [incitatio, Lat.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

After that Dionise, by their incitation, had expelled Plato out of Sicily, they abandoned their habite and severity. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 139.

He was satisfied, that Sarah's motion proceeded not merely from her anger, but from a divine incitation. Patrick on Genes. xxi. 12.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations. Gov. of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity. Decay of Piety.

To INCI'TE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shakspeare.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right. Shakspeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCI'TEMENT.† n. s. [old French, incitement.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

Let his actions speak him; and this shield,
Let down from heaven, that to his youth will yield
Such copy of incitement. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Hartlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope, Statius.

INCI'TER.* n. s. [from incite.] An inciting cause; that which encourages.

They held it as an inciter of lust. Feltham, Res. ii. 36.

All this which I have depainted to thee, are inciters and rousers of my mind. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iii. 6.

INCI'VIL. adj. [incivil. Fr.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVI'LITY. n. s. [incivilité, Fr. in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility. Tillotson.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

INCI'VILLY.* adv. [from incivil.] Rudely. See UNCIVILLY.

To INCLA'SP.* v. a. [from clasp.] To hold fast; to clasp.

He inclaspeth the whole world within his outstretched arms; his soul is as wide as the whole universe. Cudworth, Serm. p. 65.

I'NCLAVATED.* adj. [in and clavatus, Lat.] Set; fast fixed.

These [teeth] are more firmly inclavated, and infixed into the jaw bones, by treble or quadruple roots. Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 81.

INCLE'MENCY. n. s. [inclemence, Fr. inclementia, Lat.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heaven's inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLE'MENT. adj. [in and clemens, Lat.] Unmerciful; unpitying; void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftener of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
The inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow. Milton, P. L.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCLI'NABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Lat.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to.

People are not always inclinable to the best. Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton, P. L.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINA'TION.† n. s. [inclinaison, inclination, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter. Newton, Opticks.

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law. South.

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.

Bid him
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

6. Flexion: the act of bowing. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

There was a pleasaunt arber, not by art
But of the trees owne inclination made. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 44.

To sit, doth not [here] signify any peculiar inclination or flexion, any determinate location or position, of the body. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

7. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

It was found to be this very inclination to the axis of the earth; and proportionably, though not equally, answering to the degrees of latitude. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 282.

8. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some fæces or sediment by only stooping the vessel, which is also called decantation. Quincy.

INCLI'NATORY.† adj. [from incline.]

1. Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Applied to the magnetical needle. See the seventh sense of INCLINATION.

This needle, touched with the stone, and directing towards the north and south, the mariners, as the magnetical philosophers call their directory needle; not only for the reason intimated, but to distinguish it also from their other, called the inclinatory needle. Gregory, Posthum. p. 281.

INCLI'NATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from North and South.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To INCLI'NE.† v. n. [inclino, Lat. incliner, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend towards any part: with to or towards.

Her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead. Prov. ii. 18.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way. Rowe.

2. To bend the body; to bow.

The winged warriour low inclin'd
At his Creator's feet with reverence due. Fairfax, Tass. ix. 60.

He, kingly, from his state

3. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
—— He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part. Shakspeare.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech. Judges.

To INCLI'NE.† v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton, P. L.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field. Pope.

A towering structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclin'd. Pope.

2. To turn towards any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law. Common Prayer.

Ye have not inclined your ear unto me. Jeremiah.

But that from us aught should ascend to heaven
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer. Milton, P. L.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

An embracing vine,
Whose bunches hanging down seem'd to entice
All passers-by to taste their luscious wine,
And did themselves into their hands incline,
As freely offering to be gathered. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 54.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,
As to some being of superiour kind. Dryden.

INCLI'NER.* n. s. [from incline.] In dialling, an inclined dial. Dict. of Arts.

To INCLI'P. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to enclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt have't. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To INCLO'ISTER.† v. a. [enclostrer, Fr. See To ENCLOISTER.] To shut up in a cloister.

Such a beatifick face
Incloysters here this narrow floor,
That possest all hearts before. Lovelace's Luc. p. 47.

To INCLO'SE.* v. a. [Dr. Johnson takes no notice of this way of writing enclose; which, however, is very common; and which he has often used himself; though certainly enclose is more correct, from its French origin, enclos.] To part from things or grounds common by a fence; to surround; to shut in. See To ENCLOSE.

A garden inclosed is my sister. Cantic. iv. 12.

INCLO'SER.* n. s. [from inclose.] One that encloses. See ENCLOSER.

A most unconscionable incloser and impropriator. Dean Martin, Lett. (1662,) p. 23.

INCLO'SURE.* See ENCLOSURE.

To INCLO'UD.† v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

The heavens on everie side enclowded be. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakspeare.

To INCLU'DE. v. a. [includo, Lat.]

1. To inclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire lease. Bacon.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLU'SION.* n. s. [inclusio, Lat.] The act of including.

INCLU'SIVE. adj. [inclusif, Fr.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCLU'SIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

To INCO'ACH.* See To ENCOACH.

INCOA'CT.* } adj. [incoactus, Lat.] Unconstrained.
INCOA'CTED. } See COACTED. Bullokar, and Coles.

INCOA'GULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXI'STENCE. n. s. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusal word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCO'G.† adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — "Some words are hitherto but fairly split, and therefore only in their way to perfection; as incog, and plenipo: but in a short time, it is to be hoped, they will be further docked to inc, and plen." Tatler, No. 230.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCO'GITABLE.* adj. [Lat. incogitabilis.] Unthought of.

The most flagitious, incogitable fact. Dean King, Serm. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 31.

INCO'GITANCY.† n. s. [incogitantia, Lat.] Want of thought.

It cannot argue any want of judgement in the author, but meer incogitancy only. Ferrand on Love Melanch. (1640,) p. 112.

Which action, done out of a sudden incogitancy, might pass for but a weakness. South, Serm. vii. 211.

One man's fancies are laws to succeeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and meerly vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Decay of Piety.

INCO'GITANT.* adj. [incogitans, Lat.] Thoughtless; inconsiderate.

His first example saith, "It is a just law that every one shall peaceably enjoy his estate in lands or otherwise." Does this law attain to no good end? The bar will blush at this most incogitant woodcock. Milton, Colasterion.

Men are careless and incogitant, and slip into the pit of destruction before they are aware. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

INCO'GITANTLY.* adv. [from incogitant.] Without consideration.

Some—do not imprudently or incogitantly refer the prayers and fasting to the valediction of Paul and Barnabas. Knatchbull's Annot. Tr. p. 146.

Men almost as often speak incogitantly, as they think silently. Barrow, Serm. on St. James, iii. 2.

INCO'GITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCO'GNITO.† adv. [incognitus, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—We borrow the term from the Italian incognito; the great men of which country were fond of travelling, or walking about, in disguise.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago
Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

The prince royal of Prussia came thither incognito. Tatler, No. 17.

He designs to stay there incognito a few days. Bp. Berkeley, Lett. to T. Prior, (1713.)

INCOHE'RENCE. }
INCOHE'RENCY. } n. s. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

2. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCOHE'RENT.† adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marle or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

3. Not suitable to; not agreeing.

Two incoherent and incombining dispositions. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 10.

INCOHE'RENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOLU'MITY.† n. s. [incolumité, Fr. incolumitas, Lat.] Safety; security. A word very little in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country. Howell.

To INCO'MBER.* See To ENCUMBER, and To INCUMBER. Barret and Sherwood write it incomber.

To INCOMBI'NE.* v. n. [in and combine.] To differ; not to agree.

To sow the sorrow of man's nativity with seed of two incoherent and incombining dispositions. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 10.

INCOMBUSTIBI'LITY. n. s. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility. Ray.

INCOMBU'STIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBU'STIBLENESS. n. s. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

I'NCOME.† n. s. [in and come. Sax. incuman, to come in, to enter.]

1. Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repinest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford
So large an income to the village lord. Dryden, Georg.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury.

2. Coming-in; admission; introduction. Not now in use. It was a favourite expression in Cromwell's time.

He that walks up unto that light, and improves that strength, which God hath already communicated unto him, shall have more abundant incomes of light and strength from God. Bp. Rust, Disc. of Truth, § 17.

Every humour and fantastick unaccountable motion was, by some, represented as the work of that Spirit to which they were most opposite: thus when warm and brisk sanguine presented a cheerful scene, and filled the imagination with pleasant dreams; these were divine illapses, the joys and incomes of the Holy Ghost! Glanville, Serm. iii. p. 179.

This hath been commonly experimented by the devotos of all religions: for even among the devouter Turks and Heathens we may find as notorious instances of those incomes and enlargements, as in any of our modern histories of Christian experiences. Scott, Works, ii. 129. (edit. 1718.)

INCO'MING.* adj. [from income; incuman, Sax.] Coming in.

It is the first and fundamental interest of the labourer, that the farmer should have a full incoming profit on the product of his labour. Burke, Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

INCOMMENSURABI'LITY.† n. s. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

Mr. W. Warner made an inverted logarithmicall table, whereas Briggs's table fills his margin with numbers, encreasing by unites, and over-against them setts their logarithms, which, because of incommensurability, must needs be either abundant or deficient. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 579.

INCOMME'NSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, con, and mensurabilis, Lat.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMME'NSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Lat.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

INCOMMI'XTURE.* n. s. [in and commixture.] The state of being unmixed.

In what parity and incommixture the language of that people stood, which were casually discovered in the heart of Spain, between the mountains of Castile, no longer ago than in the time of Duke D'Alva, we have not met with a good account farther than that their words were Basquish or Cantabrian. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 135.

To INCO'MMODATE.† } v. a. [incommodo, Lat. incommoder, Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.
To INCOMMO'DE. }

Neither know I whether is more hard to manage of the two; a dejected estate, or prosperous; whether we may be more incommodated with a resty horse, or with a tired one. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 2.

Temporal pressures and adversities—may sometimes incommode the man, yet can never reach the saint; and though they break the casket, can never come at the jewel. South, Serm. vi. 134.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMO'DIOUS. adj. [incommodus, Lat.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooker.

Men's intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMO'DIOUSLY.† adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

I told how myself had stood so incommodiously by means of the great press, as I heard it not well. Harington, Br. View of the Ch. (1653,) p. 190.

INCOMMO'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMO'DITY. n. s. [incommodité, Fr. incommoditas, Lat.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser on Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smoak. Wotton, Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABI'LITY.† n. s. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

The incommunicability of this peace with many out of his church. Hales, Rem. p. 181.

INCOMMU'NICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. King Charles.

Light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glanville.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature. Stillingfleet.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reverence to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMU'NICABLENESS.* n. s. [from incommunicable.] The state or quality of not being impartible.

As by honouring him, we acknowledge him God, so by the incommunicableness of honour we acknowledge him one God. Mede, Apost. of the Lat. Times, p. 33.

INCOMMU'NICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMU'NICATED.* adj. [in and communicated.] Not imparted.

Excellencies, so far as we know, incommunicated to any creature. More, Antid. against Idol. ch. 2.

INCOMMU'NICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgements and administrations of common justice are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale, Common Law.

INCOMMU'TABLE.* adj. [in and commutable.] Unchangeable; not subject to change. Bullokar.

INCOMMUTABI'LITY.* n. s. [from incommutable.] The state or quality of being unchangeable.

This order, by its own incommutability, keeps all things mutable within their several ranks and conditions, which otherwise would run into confusion. Transl. of Boethius, (Oxf. 1674,) p. 187.

INCOMPA'CT. } adj. [in and compact.] Not joined; not cohering.
INCOMPA'CTED. }

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompacted. Boyle.

INCO'MPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were
To an untirable and continuate goodness. Shakspeare, Timon.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Now this mask
Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden

INCO'MPARABLENESS.* n. s. [from incomparable.] Excellence beyond comparison; the state or quality of being incomparable. Scott.

INCO'MPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South,

2. Excellently; to the highest degree A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustinas, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPA'RED.* adj. [in and compared.] Unmatched; peerless.

That Mantuan poet's incompared spirit,
Whose girland now is set in highest place.
Spenser, Sonn. to Sir F. Walsingham.

INCOMPA'SSIONATE.† adj. [in and compassionate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness. Sherwood.

Perhaps the sea to my afflicted state
Will prove than her less incompassionate.
Sherburne's Lydia, (Poems, 1651.)

INCOMPA'SSIONATELY.* adv. [from incompassionate.] Without pity or compassion.

INCOMPATIBI'LITY.† n. s. [incompatibilité, Fr. properly incompetibility, in and competo, Lat. And accordingly Hammond writes it incompetibility.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompetibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension: but the incompetibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

The incompetibility of true faith with carnal desires.
Hammond, Works, iv. 604.

INCOMPA'TIBLE. adj. [incompatible, Fr. rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckling.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompetible with the sincerity of the love of God?
Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures.
Bentley.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the imcompossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPA'TIBLY. adv. [for incompetibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCO'MPETENCY. n. s. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCO'MPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethern, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexts, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Gov. of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spight of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCO'MPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLE'TE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete, and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLE'TENESS.† n. s. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

He — supplies what her incompleteness went seeking.
Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. To the Parl.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLE'X.* adj. [in and complex; incomplexe, Fr.] Complicated: opposed to simple.

Otherwise it is unintelligible, how any incomplex thing (as they speak) can be the complete or immediate object of belief.
Barrow, Works, ii. 55.

INCOMPLI'ANCE. n. s. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictious temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

INCOMPO'SED.† adj. [in and composed.] Disturbed; discomposed; disordered. Not much used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Howell. Two of our best poets have finely employed the word.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Howell.

Thus Satan; and him thus the anarch old,
With faltering speech and visage incompos'd,
Answer'd. Milton, P. L. ii. 989.

In the middle droops
The strong laborious ox, of honest front,
Which incompos'd he shakes. Thomson, Summer.

INCOMPOSSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from incompossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold incompossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitnesses in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that incompossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INCOMPO'SSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

INCOMPREHENSIBI'LITY.† n. s. [incomprehensibilité, Fr. from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

The constant, universal sense of all antiquity unanimously confessing an incomprehensibility in many of the articles of the Christian faith. South, Serm. iii. 217.

The plea of difficulty, and even incomprehensibility, may be urged. Professor White's Serm. Notes, p. x.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLE. adj. [incomprehensible, Fr. in and comprehensible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing incomprehensible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

Stars that seem to roll
Spaces incomprehensible. Milton, P. L.

One thing more is incomprehensible in this matter. Locke.

The laws of vegetation, and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners incomprehensible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Hooker.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLENESS. n. s. [from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's incomprehensibleness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is incomprehensible. Watts.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLY. adv. [from incomprehensible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is incomprehensibly infinite. Locke.

INCOMPREHE'NSION.* n. s. [in and comprehension.] Want of comprehension.

These mazes and incomprehensions.
Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

INCOMPREHE'NSIVE.* adj. [in and comprehensive.] Not extensive.

A most incomprehensive and inaccurate title: for this edition, the last and the best, contains the three first as well as the three last books. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iv. 4.

INCOMPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [incompressible, Fr. in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Cheyne.

INCOMPRESSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from incompressible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCU'RRING. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

They derive effects not only from inconcurring causes, but things devoid of all efficiency. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONCE'ALABLE. adj. [in and conceal.] Not to be hid; not to be kept secret.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONCE'IVABLE. adj. [inconceivable, Fr. in and conceivable.] Incomprehensible; not to be conceived by the mind.

Such are Christ's promises, divine inconceivable promises; a bliss to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years. Hammond.

It is inconceivable to me, that a spiritual substance should represent an extended figure. Locke.

How two ethers can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable. Newton, Opticks.

INCONCE'IVABLENESS.* n. s. [from inconceivable.] The quality or state of being inconceivable.

If any of these ways of attaining salvation seem to some men inconceivable, this very inconceivableness is thought by others a proper character to set out all for mysteries.
Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 6.

When once this method is known, there is no difficulty or inconceivableness in it, as can reasonably make a wise and considerate man call in question the truth of a well attested revelation, merely upon that account.
Clarke, Evid. of Natural and Rev. Religion.

INCONCE'IVABLY. adv. [from inconceivable.] In a manner beyond comprehension; to a degree beyond human comprehension.

Does that man take a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of those lesser troubles, to secure himself from a condition inconceivably more miserable? South.

INCONCE'PTIBLE. adj. [in and conceptible; conceptus, Lat.] Not to be conceived; incomprehensible; inconceivable. A word not used.

It is inconceptible how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration without corruption, should after be corrupted. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INCONCI'NNITY.* n. s. [Lat. inconcinnitas.] Unaptness; unsuitableness; disproportion. Bullokar.

INCONCLU'DENT. adj. [in and concludens, Lat.] Inferring no consequence.

The depositions of witnesses themselves, as being false, various, contrariant, single, inconcludent Ayliffe, Parergon.

INCONCLU'DING.* part. adj. [in and conclude.] Exhibiting no powerful argument; inferring no consequence.

Those, which in after ages first denied it, [the creation of the world,] made use of very frivolous and inconcluding arguments, grounding their new opinion upon weak foundations.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. i.

INCONCLUSIVE.† adj. [in and conclusive.] Not enforcing any determination of the mind; not exhibiting cogent evidence.

The lines in which Lucretius [B. 5. 223.] proposes this objection, are as unphilosophical and inconclusive, as they are highly pathetic and poetical. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

INCONCLU'SIVELY. adv. [from inconclusive.] Without any such evidence as determines the understanding.

INCONCLU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from inconclusive.] Want of rational cogency.

A man, unskilful in syllogism, at first hearing, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse, wherewith some others, better skilled in syllogism, have been misled. Locke.

INCONCO'CT. } adj. [in and concoct.] Unripened; immature; not fully digested.
INCONCO'CTED. }

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I understand, remember, and reason better in my riper years than when I was a child, and had my organical parts less digested and inconcocted. Hale, Orig. of Mankind

INCONCO'CTION. n. s. [from inconcoct.] The state of being indigested; unripeness; immaturity.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called inquination, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INCONCU'SSIBLE.* adj. [inconcussus, Latin.] Incapable of being shaken.

Peace consummated in immutable, inconcussible, and indeficient delectation. Bp. Reynolds's Works, p. 1107.

They — use inarticulate, incondite voices, speeches, obsolete gestures, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 196.

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhymes with suiting notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

INCONDI'TIONAL. adj. [in and conditional.] Having no exception, limitation, or stipulation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred. Brown.

INCONDI'TIONATE. adj. [in and condition.] Not limited; not restrained by any conditions; absolute.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFO'RMITY.† n. s. [in and conformity.]

1. In compliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hooker.

2. Refusal to join in the established religion.

Mr. Buckley is sent to the high commission for inconformity. Abp. Laud to K. Ch. I. Hist. p. 531.

INCONFU'SED.* adj. [inconfusus, Lat.] Not confused; distinct.

All the curious diversity of articulate sounds of the voice of man, or birds, will enter into a small cranny inconfused. Bacon, Nat. Hist. ii. 192.

INCONFU'SION. n. s. [in and confusion.] Distinctness. Not used.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.

INCONGE'LABLE.* adj. [in and congelable.] Not to be frozen. Cockeram.

INCO'NGRUENCE. n. s. [in and congruence.] Unsuitableness; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCO'NGRUENT.* adj. [in and congruent.] Unsuitable; unfit; inconsistent.

It will be not incongruent to our matter, to shewe what profite may be taken by the diligente readinge of auncient poets. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 42.

As Christ's spirit and grace gives such power to go beyond the precepts; so it is not incongruent that it should so modify sins in his members to make them venial and not killing, in regard they are not done with a full consent, but with a desire of doing the contrary; of which the Apostle saith thus, Rom. vii. 20. "But if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 130.

INCONGRU'ITY. n. s. [incongruité, Fr. from incongruous.]

1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.

The fathers make use of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

She, whom after what form soe'er we see,
Is discord and rude incongruity;
She, she is dead, she's dead. Donne.

INCO'NGRUOUS. adj. [incongru, Fr. in and congruous.]

1. Unsuitable; not fitting.

Wiser heathens condemned the worship of God, as incongruous to a divine nature, and a disparagement to the Deity. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistent; absurd.

INCO'NGRUOUSLY.† adv. [from incongruous.] Improperly; unfitly.

Having little to salve the irregularity of the construction, but by saying, that Luke varied his form of speech; that is, in plain terms, he writ incongruously; when, in truth, he is acknowledged by all expositors too knowing in the Greek to commit such a solecism. Knatchbull, Annot. Tr. p. 56.

INCONNE'XEDLY. adv. [in and connex.] Without any connexion or dependance. Little used.

Others ascribed hereto, as a cause, what perhaps but casually or inconnexedly succeeds. Brown. Vulg. Err.

INCONNE'XION.* n. s. [in and connexion.] Want of connexion, or just relation.

Neither need we any better or other proof of the inconnexion of this vow with holy orders, than that of their own Dominicus à Soto. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 10.

INCO'NSCIONABLE. adj. [in and conscionable.] Void of the sense of good and evil; without influence of conscience. Not used.

So inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls' good. Spenser on Ireland.

INCO'NSEQUENCE. n. s. [inconsequence, Fr. inconsequentia, Lat.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillingfleet.

INCO'NSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequens, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is unsound, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent. Hakewill on Providence.

Men rest not in false apprehensions, without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferrible from their premises. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONSEQUE'NTIAL.* adj. [from inconsequent.] Not leading to consequences.

She has sense and ambition; but it is still the sense and ambition of a woman, that is, inconsequential. Ld. Chesterfield.

INCONSI'DERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant; mean; of little value.

I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing Denham.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. L'Estrange.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton, Opticks.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Rogers.

INCONSI'DERABLENESS. n. s. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smalness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendor of heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray on the Creation.

Inconsi'deracy.* n. s. [from inconsiderate.] Thoughtlessness. This word is modern; the old word was inconsiderancy, as in Cockeram's vocabulary, from considerance.

This is the common effect of the inconsideracy of youth. Ld. Chesterfield.

Inconsi'derance.* See Inconsi'deracy.

Inconsi'derate. adj. [inconsidere, Fr. inconsideratus, Lat.]

1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent; used both of men and things.

When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this casement with my trembling name,
Then think this name alive, and that thou thus
In it offend'st my genius. Donne.

If you lament it,
That which now looks like justice, will be thought
An inconsiderate rashness. Denham, Sophy.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politicks. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Wanting due regard; with of before the subject.

He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties. Decay of Piety.

Inconsi'derately. adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath, inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge, before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Mariamne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her; but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private orders he left behind. Addison, Spect.

Inconsi'derateness. n. s. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him, as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

Inconsidera'tion.† n. s. [inconsideration, Fr. in and consideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

Let thy merciful providence so govern all in this sickness, that I never fall into utter darkness, ignorance of Thee, or inconsideration of myself. Donne, Devot. (1625,) p. 363.

I am moved to reflect upon two principal inconsiderations; the singularity of some, and the irreverence of almost all. Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 141.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Bp. Taylor.

Inconsi'stence. }
Inconsi'stency. } n. s. [from inconsistent.]

1. Such opposition as that one proposition infers the negation of the other; such contrariety that both cannot be together.

There is a perfect inconsistency between that which is of debt, and that which is of free gift. South.

2. Absurdity in argument or narration; argument or narrative where one part destroys the other; self-contradiction.

3. Incongruity.

Mutability of temper, and inconsistency with ourselves, is the greatest weakness of human nature. Addison.

If a man would register all his opinions upon love, politicks, religion and learning, what a bundle of inconsistencies and contradictions would appear at last? Swift.

4. Unsteadiness; changeableness.

INCONSI'STENT. adj. [in and consistent.]

1. Incompatible; not suitable; incongruous: followed by with.

Finding no kind of compliance, but sharp protestations against the demands, as inconsistent with conscience, justice, or religion, the conference broke off. Clarendon.

Compositions of this nature, when thus restrained, shew that wisdom and virtue are far from being inconsistent with politeness and good humour. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Contrary, so as that one infers the negation or destruction of the other.

The idea of an infinite space or duration is very obscure and confused, because it is made up of two parts very different, if not inconsistent. Locke.

3. Absurd; having parts of which one destroys the other.

Inconsi'stently.† adv. [from inconsistent.] Absurdly; incongruously; with self-contradiction.

A melancholy kind of madness — made him speak distractedly and inconsistently. Spencer on Vulg. Proph. (1665,) p. 109.

Inconsi'stentness.* n. s. [from inconsistent.] Want of consistency.

No contradictious inconsistentness. More, Song of the Soul, Infin. st. 49.

Inconsi'sting. adj. [in and consist.] Not consistent; incompatible with. Not used.

The persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Inconso'lable.† adj. [inconsolable, Fr. in and console.] Not to be comforted; sorrowful beyond susceptibility or comfort. Bullokar.

Her women will represent to me that she is inconsolable, by reason of my unkindness. Addison.

They take pleasure in an obstinate grief, in rendering themselves inconsolable. Fiddes, Serm.

Inco'nsonancy.† n. s. [in and consonancy.]

1. Disagreement with itself.

2. [In musick.] Disagreeableness in a sound; a discordance.

Inconspi'cuous. adj. [in and conspicuous.] Indiscernible, not perceptible by the sight.

When an excellent experimenter had taken pains in accurately filling up a tube of mercury, we found that yet there remained store of inconspicuous bubbles. Boyle.

Inco'nstancy. n. s. [inconstantia, Lat. inconstance, Fr. from inconstant.]

1. Unsteadiness; want of steady adherence; mutability of temper or affection.

I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villainous inconstancy of man is able to bear. Shakspeare.

Be made the mark
For all the people's hate, the princess' curses,
And his son's rage, or the old king's inconstancy. Denham.

Irresolution on the schemes of life which offer to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison, Spect.

2. Diversity; dissimilitude.

As much inconstancy and confusion is there in their mixtures or combinations; for it is rare to find any of them pure and unmixt. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

INCO'NSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstans, Latin.]

1. Not firm in resolution; not steady in affection; various of inclination; wanting perseverance: of persons.

He is so naturally inconstant, that I marvel his soul finds not some way to kill his body. Sidney.

2. Changeable; mutable; variable: of things.

O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakspeare.

INCO'NSTANTLY.* adv. [from inconstant.] Irresolutely; unsteadily; changeably.

INCONSU'MABLE.† adj. [in and consume.] Not to be wasted. See INCONSUMPTIBLE.

Other authors say, inconsumable cloth and the wicks of perpetual lamps were made of the stones magnesia, alumen sciscile, and the like. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 362.

INCONSU'MMATE.* adj. [in and consummate.] Not completed.

There is great diversity of opinions among learned men, how far the privilege of an ambassador exempts him from penal prosecution for such conspiracies and inconsummate attempts. Hale, H. P. C. ch. 13.

INCONSU'MPTIBLE.† adj. [in and consumptus, Lat.] Not to be spent; not to be brought to an end; not to be destroyed by fire. This seems a more elegant word than inconsumable, Dr. Johnson says. The French, he might have added, have prior possession of the word. V. Cotgrave in V. INCONSUMPTIBLE.

Before I give any answer to this objection of pretended inconsumptible lights, I would gladly see the effect undoubtedly proved. Digby on Bodies.

By art were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats, inconsumptible by fire. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCONTE'STABLE.† adj. [incontestable, Fr. in and contest.] Not to be disputed; not admitting debate; uncontrovertible.

Our own being furnishes us with an evident and incontestable proof of a deity; and I believe no body can avoid the cogency of it, who will carefully attend to it. Locke.

These are incontestable proofs of a divine power. Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 140.

INCONTE'STABLY.† adv. [from incontestable.] Indisputably; uncontrovertibly.

The main substance and groundwork of the language of the Gospels and Epistles, is incontestably the same with that of the old authentic Grecians. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. I. 201.

The exalted prophecy of Isaiah, which Pope has so successfully versified in an eclogue, that incontestably surpasses the Pollio of Virgil. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

INCONTI'GUOUS. adj. [in and contiguous.] Not touching each other; not joined together.

They seemed part of small bracelets, consisting of equally little incontiguous beads. Boyle.

INCO'NTINENCE. } n. s. [incontinentia, Lat. in and INCO'NTINENCY. } continence.] Inability to restrain the appetites; unchastity.

The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this: she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly. Shakspeare.

But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree,
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with unenchanted eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence. Milton, Comus.

This is my defence;
I pleas'd myself, I shunn'd incontinence,
And, urg'd by strong desires, indulg'd my sense. Dryden.

The words sine veste Dianem agree better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julias, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.

INCO'NTINENT.* adj. [incontinens, Lat. in and continent.] Unchaste; indulging unlawful pleasure.

In these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Men shall be lovers of their own selves, false accusers, incontinent, fierce. 2 Tim. iii. 3.

INCO'NTINENT.* n. s. One who is unchaste.

O, old incontinent, dost thou not shame,
When all thy powers in chastity are spent,
To have a mind so hot? B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

INCO'NTINENT.† adv. Without delay; immediately. Obsolete.

They ran towards the far rebounded noise
To weet what wight so loudly did lament;
Unto the place they came incontinent. Spenser, F. Q.

Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,
And put on sullen black incontinent. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

He says he will return incontinent. Shakspeare, Othello.

INCO'NTINENTLY.† adv. [from incontinent.]

INCO'NY.† adj. [perhaps from in and conn, to know.]

1. Unlearned; artless. This sense is uncertain.

2. In Scotland it denotes mischievously unlucky: as, he's an incony fellow. This seems to be the meaning in Shakspeare. Dr. Johnson. — There is no such expression in the north of England as incony, as Mr. Ritson observes; or in Scotland, as we may gather from Dr. Jamieson's not noticing the word in his Scottish Dictionary. It is a cant expression, frequent in our old plays, denoting not a mischievously unlucky person, but an accomplished one, in a sneering sense; as we say, a fine fellow!

O' my troth, most sweet jests, most incony vulgar wit, when it comes so smoothly off. Shakspeare.

O superdainty canon, vicar incony! B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

A cockscomb incony, but that he wants money. Comedy of Doct. Dodypoll, (1600.)

INCO'RPORAL.† adj. [in and corporal, old Fr. incorporel.] Immaterial; distinct from matter; distinct from body.

The soule of man hath his ende and terme a spirituall alteration, incorporall. Bp. Gardiner, Expl. of the Cath. Faith, (1551,) fol. 109.

Why dost thou bend thine eye on vacancy,
And with the incorporal air dost hold discourse? Shakspeare.

Learned men have not resolved us whether light be corporal or incorporal: corporal they say it cannot be, because then it would neither pierce the air, nor solid diaphonous bodies, and yet every day we see the air illightened: incorporal it cannot be, because sometimes it affecteth the sight with offence. Ralegh.

INCORPORA'LITY. n. s. [incorporalité, Fr. from incorporal.] Immaterialness; distinctness from body.

INCORPORALLY. adv. [from incorporal.] Without matter immaterially.

To INCO'RPORATE. v. a. [incorporer, Fr.]

1. To mingle different ingredients so as they shall make one mass.

Who the swelling clouds in bladders ties,
To mollify the stubborn clods with rain,
And scatter'd dust incorporate again? Sandys.

2. To conjoin inseparably, as one body.

By your leaves, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy church incorporate two in one. Shakspeare.
Upon my knees
I charm you, by that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shakspeare.

3. To form into a corporation, or body politick. In this sense they say in Scotland the incorporate trades in any community.

The apostle affirmeth plainly of all men christian, that be they Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, they are all incorporated into one company, they all make but one body. Hooker.

The same is incorporated with a majoralty, and nameth burgesses to parliament. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The Romans did not subdue a country to put the inhabitants to fire and sword, but to incorporate them into their own community. Addison, Freeholder.

5. To work into another mass. See INCORPORATE, adj.

6. To embody; to give a material form.

Courtesy, that seemed incorporated in his heart, would not be persuaded by danger to offer any offence. Sidney.

The idolaters, who worshipped their images as gods, supposed some spirit to be incorporated therein, and so to make together with it a person fit to receive worship. Stillingfleet.

To INCO'RPORATE. v. n.

1. To unite with something else. It is commonly followed by with

Painters colours and ashes do better incorporate with oil. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is not universally true, that acid salts and oils will not incorporate or mingle. Boyle.

Thy soul
In real darkness of the body dwells,
Shut out from outward light,
To incorporate with gloomy night. Milton, S. A.

2. Sometimes it has into.

It finds the mind unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily gains upon the assent, grows up with it, and incorporates into it. South.

INCO'RPORATE.† participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Mixed together.

A fifteenth part of silver incorporate with gold, will not be recovered, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw to it the less. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Conjoined inseparably, as one body.

5. Unbodied; immaterial. Now disused, in order to avoid confusion; incorporate being, as before stated, used of things mingled.

Moses forbore to speak of angels, and things invisible and incorporate, Ralegh.

INCORPORA'TION.† n. s. [incorporation, Fr. from incorporate.]

1. Union of divers ingredients in one mass.

Make proof of the incorporation of iron with flint; for if it can be incorporated without over great charge, the cheapness of the flint doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

This, with some little additional, may further the intrinsick incorporation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Formation of a body politick.

3. Adoption; union; association: with into.

In him we actually are, by our actual incorporation into that society which hath him for their head. Hooker.

4. Without into.

He does not only invite us to come to him, but to come within him; not only to an embrace, but to an union; and by ineffable and seraphick incorporations for " us to be in him," and for " him to be in us." South, Serm. v. 141.

INCORPO'REAL. adj. [incorporalis, Lat. incorporel, Fr. in and corporeal.] Immaterial; unbodied.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immateriate, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms

Sense and perception must necessarily proceed from some incorporeal substance within us. Bentley.

INCORPO'REALLY. adv. [from incorporeal.] Immaterially; without body.

Hearing striketh the spirits more immediately than the other senses, and more incorporeally than the smelling. Bacon.

INCORPORE'ITY.† n. s. [in and corporeity.] Immateriality; distinctness from body.

Still new mists he casts before our eyes,
And now derides our prov'd incorporeities.
More, Song of the Soul, iii. i. 3.

Incommunicable attributes of the Deity appeared to agree thereto; such as, infinity, immutability, indivisibility, incorporeity. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 270.

The first stumbling-block to the ancient philosophers, and what no one could get over, was, to conceive an incorporeity, any thing entirely void of matter.
Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 394.

To INCO'RPSE. v. a. [in and corpse.] To incorporate; to unite into one body. Not used.

He grew unto his seat,
As he had been incorps'd and demy-natur'd
With the brave horse. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

INCORRE'CT.† adj. [in and correct.]

1. Not nicely finished; not exact; inaccurate; full of faults. The present usage.

The piece you think is incorrect: why take it;
I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it. Pope.

2. Not duly regulated; not corrected into proper obedience. See INCORRECTION. Not now in use.

'Tis unmanly grief:
It shews a will most incorrect to heaven;
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;
An understanding simple and unschool'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

INCORRE'CTION.* n. s. [from incorrect.] Want of correction.

The unbridled swing or incorrection of ill nature maketh one odious. Archdeacon Arnway, Tab. of Moderat. (1661,) p. 9.

INCORRE'CTLY.† adv. [from incorrect.] Inaccurately; not exactly.

And if they had not had the Gospel in their hands, they would have wrote as loosely and incorrectly as the philosophers before them. Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 16.

INCORRE'CTNESS.† n. s. [in and correctness.] Inaccuracy; want of exactness.

Many of these petty incorrectnesses are not, however, to be imputed to Froissart. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. Dissert. p. lxxvii.

Provok'd by those incorrigible fools,
I left declaiming in pedantick schools. Dryden, Juv.

Whilst we are incorrigible, God may in vengeance continue to chastise us with the judgement of war. Smalridge.

The most violent party-men are such as have discovered least sense of religion or morality; and when such are laid aside, as shall be found incorrigible, it will be no difficulty to reconcile the rest. Swift.

2. Not capable of amendment: of things.

The loss is many times irrecoverable, and the inconvenience incorrigible. More, Divine Dialogues.

What are their thoughts of things, but variety of incorrigible errour? L'Estrange.

INCORRIGIBI'LITY.* n. s. [from incorrigible.] Depravity beyond amendment.

To see so plainly, to feel so thoroughly, the trouble, the blindness, the folly, the imbecility, the ingratitude, the incorrigibility, the strange perverseness, perfidiousness, malice, and cruelty of mankind in so many instances—would it not astone a mind so pure? Barrow, Works, i. 474.

INCO'RRIGIBLENESS. n. s. [from incorrigible.] Hopeless depravity; badness beyond all means of amendment.

What we call penitence becomes a sad attestation of our incorrigibleness. Decay of Piety.

I would not have chiding used, much less blows, till obstinacy and incorrigibleness make it absolutely necessary. Locke.

INCO'RRIGIBLY. adv. [from incorrigible.] To a degree of depravity beyond all means of amendment.

Some men appear incorrigibly mad;
They cleanliness and company renounce. Roscommon.

INCORRU'PT.† } adj. [in and corruptus, Latin;
INCORRU'PTED. } incorrompu, French.]

1. Free from foulness or depravation.

The wreath of incorruptive praise.
Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. i.

To INCRA'SSATE. v. a. [in and crassus, Lat.] To thicken; the contrary to attenuate.

If the cork be too light to sink under the surface, the body of water may be attenuated with spirits of wine; if too heavy, it may be incrassated with salt. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Acids dissolve or attenuate, alcalies precipitate or incrassate. Newton, Opticks.

Acids, such as are austere, as unripe fruits, produce too great a stricture of the fibres, incrassate and coagulate the fluids; from whence pains and rheumatism. Arbuthnot.

To INCRA'SSATE.* v. n. To become thick; to grow fat.

Their spirits fattened and incrassated within them.
Hammond, Works, iv. 651.

INCRA'SSATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Fattened; filled. Sherwood.

Their understandings were so gross within them, being fattened and incrassate with magical phantasms.
Hammond, Works, iv. 657.

INCRASSA'TION. n. s. [from incrassate.]

1. The act of thickening.

2. The state of growing thick.

Nothing doth conglaciate but water; for the determination of quicksilver is fixation, that of milk coagulation, and that of oil incrassation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INCRA'SSATIVE. n. s. [from incrassate.] Having the quality of thickening.

The two latter indicate restringents to stench, and incrassatives to thicken the blood. Harvey.

To INCRE'ASE.† v. n. [incresco, Lat. encresser, old Fr. See To ENCREASE.]

1. To grow more in number, or greater in bulk; to advance in quantity or value, or in any quality capable of being more or less.

Hear and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily. Deut. vi. 3.

Profane and vain babbling will increase unto ungodliness.
2 Tim. ii. 16.

From fifty to threescore he loses not much in fancy, and judgement, the effect of observation, still increases. Dryden.

Henry, in knots, involv'd his Emma's name
Upon this tree; and, as the tender mark,
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark:
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That as the wound the passion might increase. Prior.

2. To be fertile.

Fishes are more numerous or increasing than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn. Hale.

To INCRE'ASE. v. a. [See To ENCREASE.] To make more or greater.

Hye thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead. Shakspeare.
He hath increased in Judah mourning and lamentation.
Sam.
I will increase the famine. Ezek. v. 16.
I will increase them with men like a flock. Ezek. xxxvi.
It serves to increase that treasure, or to preserve it. Temple.

INCRE'ASE.† n. s. [from the verb. Though, in the poetical examples, the accent falls on the last syllable of this word, and Dr. Johnson accordingly so marks it; it has, in modern times, been often placed on the first; by way of so distinguishing the substantive from the verb.]

1. Augmentation; the state of growing more or greater.

For three years he liv'd with large increase
In arms of honour, and esteem in peace. Dryden.
Hail, bards triumphant! born in happier days,
Whose honours with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow. Pope.

2. Increment; that which is added to the original stock.

Take thou no usury of him nor increase. Levit. xxv. 36.

3. Produce.

The increase of the threshing-floor, and the increase of the wine-press. Num. xviii. 30.

As Hesiod sings, spread waters o'er thy field,
And a most just and glad increase 'twill yield. Denham.

Those grains which grew produced an increase beyond expectation. Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Generation.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring a babe. Shakspeare.

5. Progeny.

All the increase of thy house shall die in the flower of their age. 1 Sam. ii. 33.

Him young Thoasa bore, the bright increase
Of Phorcys. Pope, Odyssey.

6. The state of waxing, or growing full orbed. Used of the moon.

Seeds, hair, nails, hedges, and herbs, will grow soonest, if set or cut in the increase of the moon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INCRE'ASEFUL.* adj. [increase and full.] Abundant of produce.

To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

INCRE'ASER.† n. s. [from increase.] He who increases.

A lover and increaser of his people.
Beaum. and Fl. Valentinian.

Though melancholy persons love to be dark and alone, yet darkness is a great encreaser of the humour.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 261.

INCRE'ASIBLE.* adj. [from increase.] That may be increased. Sherwood.

INCREA'TE.* adj. [in and creatus, Lat.] Not created. Bullokar.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milton, P. L.
The alcoran was not the increate word of God.
L. Addison, Life of Mahumed, p. 48.

INCREA'TED. adj. Not created.

Since the desire is infinite, nothing but the absolute and increated Infinite can adequately fill it. Cheyne.

INCREDIBI'LITY. n. s. [incredibilité, Fr.] The quality of surpassing belief.

For objects of incredibility, none are so removed from all appearance of truth as those of Corneille's Andromede.
Dryden.

INCRE'DIBLE. adj. [incredibilis, Lat.] Surpassing belief; not to be credited.

The ship Argo, that there might want no incredible thing in this fable, spoke to them. Ralegh.

Presenting things impossible to view,
They wander through incredible to true. Granville.

INCRE'DIBLENESS.† n. s. [from incredible.] Quality of being incredible.

The very strangeness, or incredibleness, of the story.
M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. (1668,) p. 180.

Incre'dibly.† adv. [from incredible.] In a manner not to be believed.

The arts are incrediblely improved. Hakewill on Providence, p. 245.

Incredu'lity.† n. s. [incredulité, Fr.] Quality of not believing; hardness of belief.

Let not the incredulity of them trouble thee, that speak against thee. 2 Esdr. xv. 3.

He was more large in the description of Paradise, to take away all scruple from the incredulity of future ages. Ralegh.

INCRE'DULOUS. adj. [incredule, Fr. incredulus, Lat.] Hard of belief; refusing credit.

I am not altogether incredulous but there may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

Incre'dulousness. n. s. [from incredulous.] Hardness of belief; incredulity.

Incre'mable. adj. [in and cremo, Lat.] Not consumable by fire.

If from the skin of the salamander these incremable pieces are composed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I'ncrement. n. s. [incrementum, Lat.]

1. Act of growing greater.

Divers conceptions are concerning the Nile's increment, or inundation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Increase; matter added.

This stratum is expanded at top, serving as the seminary that furnisheth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

3. Produce.

The orchat loves to wave
With winter wind before the gems exert
Their feeble heads: the loosen'd roots then drink
Large increment, earnest of happy years. Philips, Cider, B. 2.

To I'NCREPATE.† v. a. [increpo, Lat.] To chide: to reprehend. Cockeram.

Increpa'tion.† n. s. [increpatio, Lat. increpation, Fr.] Reprehension; chiding.

His answer was a kind of soft increpation to them, and a strong instruction to all times. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 311.

Here we have David's increpation of Doeg. Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. p. 226.

Whosoever shall in the sincerity of his heart acquit himself as to all the foregoing duties, and thereby prepare and adorn himself to meet and converse with his Saviour at this divine feast, shall never be accosted with the thunder of that dreadful increpation from him, "Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment?" South, Serm. ii. 308.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church; then, more publick reprehensions and increpations. Hammond.

To Incro'ach. See To Encroach.

Incru'ental.* adj. [Lat. incruentus.] Unbloody; without bloodshed.

He musters out as many places as he can find, that make any mention of liturgy, oblation, holy victim, incruental sacrifice. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674,) p. 408.

To INCRU'ST. } v. a. [incrusto, Lat. incruster,
To INCRU'STATE. } Fr.] To cover with an additional coat adhering to the internal matter.

The finer part of the wood will be turned into air, and the grosser stick baked and incrustate upon the sides of the vessel. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some rivers bring forth spars, and other mineral matter, so as to cover and incrust the stones. Woodward.

Save but our army; and let Jove incrust
Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting rust. Pope.

Any of these sun-like bodies in the centres of the several vortices, are so incrustated and weakened as to be carried about in the vortex of the true sun. Cheyne.

The shield was purchased by Woodward, who incrusted it with a new rust. Arbuthnot and Pope.

Incrusta'tion. n. s. [incrustation, Fr. from incrusto, Lat.] An adherent covering; something superinduced.

Having such a prodigious stock of marble, their chapels are laid over with such a rich variety of incrustations as cannot be found in any other part. Addison on Italy.

To I'NCUBATE. v. n. [incubo, Lat.] To sit upon eggs.

Incuba'tion. n. s. [incubation, Fr. incubatio, Lat.] The act of sitting upon eggs to hatch them.

Whether that vitality was by incubation, or how else, is only known to God. Ralegh, Hist.

Birds have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way. Derham.

As the white of an egg by incubation, so can the serum by the action of the fibres be attenuated. Arbuthnot.

Incu'biture.* n. s. [incubitus, Lat.] Incubation.

If you go on and describe it, [the Manucodiata,] as Cardan, Hernandes, Scaliger, and others have done, that it is a bird which lives in the air, without ever coming near the earth till it falls down dead upon it, that its food is the dew of heaven, and the incubiture of the female on the back of the male, their ideas will be enlarged according to the degrees of information; but no fecundity of the mind can make them perceive one single property, farther than they are instructed. Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 153.

I'ncubus.† n. s. [Lat. incube, Fr. We use sometimes the Latin plural incubi; and sometimes, incubusses. Dr. Johnson has given only the solitary medical citation from Floyer. The incubus of the older time was a fairy: he succeeded, as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, to the ancient Fauni, and like them was supposed to inflict that oppression, which goes under the name of the ephialtes, or night-mare. So Bullokar: "The vulgar think it [the incubus] some spirit, but the physicians affirm it to be a natural disease, &c." The incubus had the character also of being a great lover of women.]

1. A pretended fairy or demon.

A legendary fable, that Luther was begotten by an incubus. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 136.

Stories — of hags, of incubi. More, Pre-exist. st. 43.

That old fabulous fancy, which they say some of the Fathers had from the Jews, of devils being incubusses, and that in their courtships to women they gratified them with these inventions, which might help their decaying beauties. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 124.

Belial, the dissolutest spirit that fell,
The sensuallest, and, after Asmodai,
The fleshliest incubus. Milton, P. R. ii. 152.

2. The night-mare.

The incubus is an inflation of the membranes of the stomach, which hinders the motion of the diaphragma, lungs, and pulse, with a sense of a weight oppressing the breast. Floyer.

Such as are troubled with incubus, or witch-ridden, as we call it. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 91.

To INCU'LCATE.† v. a. [inculco, Lat. inculquer, Fr. We had formerly the pedantick word inculk; but inculcate is also a very old word, although Dr. Johnson could find no earlier example of it than that from Atterbury. It existed a century and a half before his time. Inculk, though not to be used, has publick authority for it; as it occurs in the "Injunctions given by the Queenes Ma-jestie, 1559." Sign. B. ii. b. "The same minister shall inculke these or such sentences."] To impress by frequent admonitions; to enforce by constant repetition.

The apostles of Christ the Lord—very often inculcate, that men are justified before God by faith. Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576,) E. vii. b.

Manifest truth may deserve sometimes to be inculcated, because we are too apt to forget it. Atterbury.

Homer continually inculcates morality, and piety to the gods. Broome, Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

INCULCA'TION.† n. s. [from inculcate. Fr. inculcation.] The act of impressing by frequent admonition; admonitory repetition.

Industry in action being as importunity in speech, by continual inculcation forcing a yielding beyond the strength of reason. Fuller, Holy War, p. 154.

Often inculcation of warning necessarily implies a danger. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 5.

It requires the helps and assistances of frequent inculcation. South, Serm. vii. 32.

INCU'LPABLE.† adj. [incoulpable, old Fr. in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblamable; not reprehensible.

Ignorance, so far as it may be resolved into natural inability, is, as to men, at least inculpable, and consequently not the object of scorn, but pity. South.

It was an innocent and inculpable piece of ignorance. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 140.

INCU'LPABLENESS.* n. s. [from inculpable.] Unblamableness.

Since the inculpableness of their meerly natural imbecility abates to them the shame of owning it, let them not at least voluntarily surcharge themselves with such imperfections, as want that excuse and extenuation. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess, P. ii. (1654,) p. 120.

INCU'LPABLY. adv. [in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblamably; without blame.

As to errours or infirmities, the frailty of man's condition has invincibly, and therefore inculpably, exposed him. South.

INCU'LT.† adj. [inculte, French; incultus, Lat.] Uncultivated; untilled. This word is not the coinage of Thomson, as the solitary citation from his Autumn by Dr. Johnson might lead the reader to suppose. It was in use a century before his time.

Germany then, saith Tacitus, was incult and horrid; now, full of magnificent cities. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 332.

Her forests huge,
Incult, robust, and tall, by Nature's hand
Planted of old. Thomson, Autumn.

INCU'LTIVATED.* adj. [in and cultivated.] Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.

The soil, though incultivated, so full of vigour, that it procreates without seed. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 380.

INCULTIVA'TION.* n. s. [in and cultivation.] Want or neglect of cultivation.

Inhabited by wild beasts, and in that state of incultivation which nature in her luxuriant fancies loves to form, the wilderness was of no value to its proprietors. Berington, Hist. of Abeillard, p. 108.

INCU'LTURE.* n. s. [in and culture.] Want or neglect of cultivation.

The inculture of the world would perish it into a wilderness, should not the activeness of commerce make it an universal city. Feltham, Res. ii. 49.

INCU'MBENCY.† n. s. [from incumbent.]

1. The act or state of lying upon another.

We find them more fragile, and not so well qualified to support great incumbencies and weights. Evelyn, B. i. ch. 3. sect. 17.

2. Imposition as a duty.

The duties of a man, of a friend, of a husband, of a father; and all the incumbencies of a family. Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 288.

3. The state of keeping a benefice.

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop, during his incumbency in the same see. Swift.

INCU'MBENT. adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight. Milton, P. L.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it; to lift upwards with them what water they found above them. Boyle.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air. Dryden.

Here the rebel giants lye;
And, when to move th' incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addison.

Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domes
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death. Thomson.

2. Imposed as a duty.

All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all Christians. Sprat, Serm.

There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers. L'Estrange.

Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us. Atterbury.

INCU'MBENT.† n. s. [incumbens, Latin; old French, incumbent, "pourvu d'un bénéfice, celui qui l'occupe." Lacombe.] He who is in present possession of a benefice.

In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron. Swift.

To INCU'MBER.† v. a. [encombrer, French; ingombrare, Ital.] To embarrass. See To ENCUMBER.

So huge a rout

My cause is call'd, and that long look'd-for day
Is still incumber'd with some new delay. Dryden, Juv.

INCU'MBRANCE.* See ENCUMBRANCE.

INCU'MBROUS.* adj. [from incumber.] Cumbersome; troublesome.

Harde language, and harde matere,
Is incombrous for thee to here. Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 354.

To INCU'R. v. a. [incurro, Latin.]

1. To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.

I have incurred displeasure from inferiors for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.

They, not obeying,
Incurr'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And, manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton, P. L.

So judge thou still, presumptuous! till the wrath,
Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton, P. L.

They had a full persuasive that not to do it were to desert God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.

2. To occur; to press on the senses: with to or into.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye: but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependence; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South.

INCURABI'LITY. n. s. [incurabilité, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.

We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Harvey.

INCU'RABLE. adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable.] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be ministred,
Or overthrow incurable ensues. Shakspeare.
Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help. Shakspeare.

A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture has cured it in cattle. Arbuthnot.

If idiots and lunaticks cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital. Swift.

Incu'rableness.† n. s. [from incurable.] State of not admitting any cure.

This incurableness in every sickness — is indeed the very soul of the sickness, whereby it liveth, though the patient dieth. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 242.

Incu'rably. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant. Locke.

Incurio'sity.* n. s. [incuriosité, Fr. Cotgrave.] Want of curiosity; inattentiveness; negligence.

That you may not charge me with incuriosity. Wotton, Lett. (1611.)

His incuriosity or indifference, when truth was offered to be laid before him as a private man, and by one who, he knew, had the repute of exercising every spiritual power necessare to inforce it, shews him [Pilate] in a light much less excusable. Warburton, Serm. i. p. 1.

INCU'RIOUS.† adj. [in and curious. Pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, an uncouth and unusual word. But it had been in use many years before. See also Incuriously, and Incuriousness.] Negligent; inattentive.

Can we think that the Providence, which is so precisely curious as to mark and observe the falling of sparrows, should be so supinely incurious as to slight and neglect the falling of kingdoms? Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 270.

The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye. Derham.

He seldom at the Park appear'd;
Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
To know the converse of mankind. Swift.

Incu'riously.* adv. [from incurious.] Without nice examination: without inquisitiveness.

It is enough for me to rest in the hope, that I shall once see them; in the mean time, let me be learnedly ignorant, and incuriously devout, silently blessing the power and wisdom of my infinite Creator, who knows how to honour himself by all these glorious and unrevealed subordinations. Bp. Hall, Invisible World, i. § 7.

In such an age publick money will be easily granted, and publick accounts rarely or incuriously inspected. Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 19.

Incu'riousness.* n. s. [from incurious.] Negligence; inattentiveness; carelessness.

Our reverential fear of the God of heaven calls us to eschew in the other extreme all sordid incuriousness, and slovenly neglect, in his immediate services. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 258.

Tell me, have you gone away currently with this incuriousness or unconcernedness for religion? Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

Incu'rsion. n. s. [from incurro, Latin.]

1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.

Sins of daily incursion, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South.

2. [Incursion, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.

Spain is very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to make an hostile invasion, or incursion, upon their havens and roads. Bacon.

Now the Parthian king hath gather'd all his host
Against the Scythian, whose incursions wild
Have wasted Sogdiana. Milton, P. R.

The incursions of the Goths disordered the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To INCU'RVATE. v. a. [incurvo, Lat.] To bend; to crook.

Sir Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of rays passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies. Cheyne.

To Incu'rve. v. a. [incurvo, Lat.] To bow; to bend. Cockeram.

Incurva'tion.† n. s. [from incurvo, Latin.]

1. The act of bending or making crooked.

Religious incurvation towards a crucifix, or the host, as to an object, and not a mere unconsidered accidental circumstance, is idolatry. More, Antid. against Atheism, ch. 1.

They bow down the dead man's thumb into the hollow of the hand; and by that incurvation they fancy to express the Name of God. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 223.

2. State of being bent; curvity; crookedness.

One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the line. Glanville.

3. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.

He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice. Stillingfleet.

Incu'rvity. n. s. [from incurvus, Latin.] Crookedness; the state of bending inward.

The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again: strait bodies, in a sudden motion, protruded obliquely downward, appear crooked. Brown.

To I'NDAGATE.† v. a. [indago, Latin.] To search; to beat out. Cockeram.

Indaga'tion.† n. s. [from indagate.] Search; enquiry; examination.

In her indagations oft-times new scents put her [the soul] by; and she takes in errours into her by the same conduits she doth truths. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Paracelsus directs us, in the indagation of colours, to have an eye principally upon salts. Boyle.

Part hath been discovered by himself, and some by human indagation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I'NDAGATOR.† n. s. [indagator, Latin.] A searcher; an enquirer; an examiner.

For men to make nothing of this royal law of Christ, and yet to pretend to be more accurate indagators into matters of religion, and more affectionate lovers of piety than ordinary, is either to be abominably hypocritical, or grossly ignorant in the most precious and necessary parts of Christianity. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 200.

The number of the elements of bodies requires to be searched into by such skilful indagators of nature. Boyle.

To Inda'mage. See To Endamage.

To INDE'AR. See To Endear.

Inde'arment.* n. s. [from indear.] Cause of love. See Endearment.

Likeness is the greatest indearment of love, and the most natural foundation of light and complacency. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 172.

To Inda'rt. v. a. [in and dart.] To dart in; to strike in.

I'll look to like, if looking liking move;
But no more deep will I indart mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly. Shakspeare.

To INDE'BT. v. a.

1. To put into debt.

2. To oblige; to put under obligation.

Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us. St. Luke, xi. 4.

He —
Atonement for himself, or offering meet,
Indebted and undone, has none to bring. Milton, P. L.
This blest alliance may
The indebted nation bounteously repay. Granville.

Inde'bted. participial adj. [in and debt.] Obliged by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt. It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.

If the course of politick affairs cannot in any good course go forward without fit instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let polity acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things. Hooker.

Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury.

Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers.

INDE'FINITE. adj. [indefinitus, Lat. indefinit, Fr.]

1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.

Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust. Bacon, Essays.

Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Bacon.

Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epick poem: the time of this last is left indefinite. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.

Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Spectator.

INDE'FINITELY. adv. [from indefinite.]

1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.

We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.

We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice. Brown.

A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God. Smalridge.

2. To a degree indefinite.

To INDE'NT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Latin.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakspeare. As you like it.

The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton, P. L.

Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton, Vac. Ex.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.

To INDE'NT.† v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.]

1. To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakspeare.

I do indent, you shall return the money. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

2. To run in and out.

Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch [the hare]
Turn, and return, indenting with the way. Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

INDE'NT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inequality; incisure; indentation. This is little used.

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. Stamp.

Only an indent or impression. Philos. Transact. vol. li. p. 376.

INDENTA'TION. n. s. [in and dens, Lat.] An indenture; waving in any figure.

The margins do not terminate in a streight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward.

INDE'NTMENT.* n. s. [from indent.] An indenture. Not in use.

The brabbling neighbours on him call
For counsel in some crabbed case of law,
Or some indentments, or some bond to draw. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 2.

INDE'NTURE.† n. s. [low Lat. indentura; Fr. endenture.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart.

The promises and engagements of an higher indenture, those of the Christian. Hammond, Works, iv. 497.

The Books of the Old and New Testament (as they are usually distinguished) do, like a pair of indentures, justify one another, and assure us that there can be no fraud or forgery in either of them. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

The law is the best expositor of the gospel: they are like a pair of indentures; they answer in every part. Leslie, Short Method with the Jews.

The critick to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

To INDE'NTURE.* v. a. [from indent.] To indent; to wrinkle. A word hardly to be allowed.

Though age may creep on, and indenture the brow,
Still then shall our constancy last. Woty, Autumnal Song.

INDEPE'NDENCE.† } n. s. [independance, Fr. in and INDEPE'NDENCY. } dependence.]

1. Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison, Spect.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency:
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

2. The state of those, called independents. See INDEPENDENT, n. s.

Independence is much more dangerous than Brownism. Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 79.

O God, put it into the heart of our king and parliament to take speedy order for the suppression of this wild variety of sects, and lawless independencies, ere it be too late. Seasonable Serm. (1644,) p. 24.

INDEPE'NDENT.† adj. [independant, Fr. in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

3. Belonging to the independents.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison, Spect.

INDEPE'NDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superiour authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderson.

INDEPE'NDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDE'PRECABLE.* adj. [indeprecabilis, Lat.] That cannot be entreated. Cockeram.

INDEPREHE'NSIBLE.* adj. [indeprehensibilis, Lat.] That cannot be found out.

Calling the second a case perplexed and indeprehensible. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633,) p. 174.

INDEPRI'VABLE.* adj. [in and deprivable.] That cannot be taken away.

It [the sovereign good] should not be transient, nor derived from the will of others, nor in their power to take away; but be durable, self-derived, and (if I may use the expression) indeprivable. Harris, Dial. concerning Happiness, P. i.

INDESCRI'BABLE.* adj. [in and describable.] That cannot be described.

INDESE'RT.† n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Universal contempt is a shrewd, not infallible, sign of an universal indesert. Phillips, Theatr. Poet. (1675,) Pref.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeserts. Addison, Spect.

INDE'SINENT.* adj. [in and desinens, Lat.] Incessant.

The last kind of activity, and the perceptivity resulting from it, is much more noble, more indesinent, and indefeasible, than the first. Baxter on the Soul, i. 351.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETE'RMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that, as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INDETE'RMINATE. adj. [indeterminé, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton, Opticks.

INDETE'RMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INDETERMINA'TION. n. s. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDETE'RMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDEVO'TE.* adj. [indevot, Fr.] Coldly devoted; little affected. Cotgrave.

Mr. Wotton tells me he has disposed of all the Tabulæ, and Mr. Mortlock says the same, and you will have your money by Dr. Mills or me; but they give no good account of the other little book. There are so many of the same arguments, and so indevote an age. But you must have a little patience. Bentley, Lett. p. 181.

INDEVO'TED.* part. adj. [in and devote.] Not attached; disaffected.

It grieved him to find persons of the best condition, and who loved both king and church, exceedingly indevoted to him, [Laud.] Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 63.

Mr. Cowley's connexions with some persons indevoted to the excellent chancellor, kept him at a distance from a man so congenial to himself. Hurd, Dial.

INDEVO'TION.† n. s. [indevotion, Fr. in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

That, that was licentiousness, grows ambition; and that comes to indevotion, and spiritual coldness. Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 611.

Look on your indevotion, that heartless zeal-less behaviour in the house of God. Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

Their profaneness and indevotion do incense God's displeasure. Barrow, Works, i. 90.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of profaneness. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDEVOU'T.† adj. [indevot, Fr. in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

They are only our prayers, that must stay us from being carried away with the violent assaults of discontentment; under which a praying soul can no more miscarry, than an indevout soul can enjoy safety. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 25.

A wretchless, careless, indevout spirit. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653.)

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDEVOU'TLY.* adv. [from indevout.] Without devotion.

I'NDEX.† n. s. [Lat. Our word has sometimes the apparently Latin plural indices. But we have also the singular indice, though hitherto unnoticed. See therefore INDICE.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley.

3. The table of contents to a book. Formerly prefixed to the book, as the first citation from Shakspeare shews; "indexes to their subsequent volumes." Hence it was used generally for prelude, any thing preparatory to.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
Ah me, what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

An index and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. Shakspeare, Othello.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXTE'RITY. n. s. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness; clumsiness; awkwardness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

I'NDIAN Red. n. s. Is a species of ochre; a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight. Hill on Fossils.

I'NDICANT. adj. [indicans, Lat.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

To I'NDICATE.† v. a. [indico, Lat.]

1. To show; to point out.

Mentioned in a manner that seems to indicate some connexion between them. Malone, Note in Boswell's Life of Johnson.

2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

The nature of the disease is to indicate the remedy. Burke.

INDICA'TION. n. s. [indication, Fr. indicatio, from indico, Lat.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury.

2. [In physick.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley.

4. Explanation; display.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INDI'CATIVE.† adj. [indicativus, Latin.]

A clear and real distinction between enditors, triers, and judges. Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, (1649,) p. 182.

2. A writer.
He that wilfully strives to fasten some sense of his own upon it, other than the very nature of the place will bear, must needs take upon him the person of God, and become a new inditer of Scripture: — If he then that abases the prince's coin deserves to die, what is his desert, that, instead of the tried silver of God's word, stamps the name and character of God upon Nehushtan, upon base brazen stuff of his own. Hales, Rem. p. 14.

INDI'CTION.✝ n. s. [indiction, Fr. indico, Lat.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.
After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation, and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.
There is a solemn mourning, and there is a private and domestical; the solemn is by publick indiction of authority. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 166.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the Great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.
The emperor Justinian made a law, that no writing should pass without the date of the indictions. Gregory, Posthum. p. 140.

INDI'CTIVE.* adj. [indictivus, Lat.] Proclaimed; declared.
In all the funerals of note, especially in the publick or indictive, the corpse was first brought with a vast train of followers, into the forum. Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. 5.

INDI'FFERENCE. } n. s. [indifference, French; indiffer-
INDI'FFERENCY. } entia, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.
In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon, Essays.
By an equal indifferency for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.
A perfect indifferency in the mind, not determinable by its last judgement, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifferency to act, or not to act till determined by the will. Locke.
Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifferency look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.
Read the book with indifferency and judgement, and thou canst not but greatly commend it. Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.
Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.
A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.
Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.
He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifferency as he would a piece of publick news. Swift.
The people of England should be frighted with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbuthnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.
The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDI'FFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferens, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.
Doth his majesty
Incline to it or no?
—— He seems indifferent. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.
Let guilt or fear
Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them,
Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison, Cato.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.
One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Temple.
It was a law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republick, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison, Freeholder.
But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.
The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.
Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceeding evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter which way the learned shall determine. Locke.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Metcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Ascham.

I am a most poor woman and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, and no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity. Davies.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:
A counsellor or pleader at the bar,
May want Messala's pow'rful eloquence,
Or be less read than deep Casselius;
Yet this indifferent lawyer is esteem'd. Roscommon.

Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indifferent writing and the best? Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse. Prior.

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods. Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not born me. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear. Mortimer.

INDI'FFERENTLY. adv. [indifferenter, Lat.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton, Opticks.

Were pardon extended indifferently to all, which of them would think himself under any particular obligation? Addison.

Though a church of England-man thinks every species of government equally lawful, he does not think them equally expedient, or for every country indifferently. Swift.

2. Equally; impartially.

That they may truly and indifferently minister justice. Common Prayer.

That discourteous dame with scornfull pryde
And foule entreaty him indignifyde. Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 30.

2. To treat unbecomingly.

Therefore in closure of a thankful mind
I deem it best to hold eternally
Their bounteous deeds and noble favours shrin'd,
Than by discourse them to indignify. Spenser, Colin Clout.

INDI'GNITY. n. s. [indignitas, from indignus, Lat. indignité, Fr.] Contumely; contemptuous injury; violation of right accompanied with insult.

Bishops and prelates could not but have bleeding hearts to behold a person of so great place and worth constrained to endure so foul indignities. Hooker.

No emotion of passion transported me, by the indignity of his carriage, to any thing unbeseeming myself. King Charles.

Man he made, and for him built
Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,
Him lord pronounc'd; and, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers, to watch and tend
Their earthly charge. Milton, P. L.

He does not see how that mighty passion for the church can well consist with those indignities and that contempt men bestow on the clergy. Swift.

To more exalted glories born,
Thy mean indignities I scorn. Pattison.

I'NDIGO. n. s. [indicum, Lat.] A plant, by the Americans called anil. In the middle of the flower is the style, which afterward becomes a jointed pod, containing one cylindrical seed in one partition, from which indigo is made, which is used in dying for a blue colour. Miller.

INDI'LATORY.* adj. [in and dilatory.] Not slow; not delaying.

Since you have firmed—new orders,—you would be pleased in like manner to give them a new form of indilatory execution. Cornwallis to the Sp. King, Suppl. to Cabala, (1654,) p. 105.

INDI'LIGENCE.* n. s. [in and diligence.] Slothfulness; carelessness.

Is it not as great an indignity, that an excellent conceit and capacity, by the indiligence of an idle tongue, should be disgraced? B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He that is bound to use all diligence to subdue his corruptions, at least to repress them; if he do not so, this indiligence of his hath some of his consent. Hammond, Works, i. 191.

INDU'BITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitate heirs of the crown. Bacon, Hen. VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line. Wotton.

To INDU'CE. v. a. [induire, Fr. induco, Latin.]

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade: of persons.

The self same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse
Induc'd me. Milton, P. L.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence: of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce; to effect.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDU'CEMENT. n. s. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered further reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to't,
Then mark th' inducement. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He lives
Higher degree of life; inducement strong
For us. Milton, P. L.

My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton, S. A.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDU'CER.† n. s. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

How can he be a mete perswader or inducer of the people to widowheade, which hath himselfe been often maried? Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) C. iii. b.

As if he were the great impeller and inducer of men to sin. South, Serm. viii. 85.

INDU'CIBLE.* adj. [from induce.]

1. That may be offered by way of induction.

Many things in philosophy [are] confirmable by sense, yet not inducible by reason. Brown, Rel. Medici.

2. That may be caused.

The satisfaction of prosperity, issuing from sense, is subject to all the changes inducible from the restless commotions of outward causes affecting and altering the sense. Barrow, Works, iii. 99.

To INDU'CT. v. a. [inductus, Lat.]

1. To introduce; to bring in.

The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Venetians. Sandys, Travels.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.

If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe, Parergon.

INDU'CTION.† n. s. [induction, Fr. inductio, Lat.]

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface, and also something introductory to a play.

This is well knowne to be true, of them that have had anye leisure to read Holy Scripture; who, remembering themselves by this my little induction, will leave to neglect history. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 205. b.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shakspeare.

Inductions are out of date, and a prologue in verse is as stale as a black velvet cloak. Beaum. and Fl. Woman-Hater, Prol.

This is but an induction; I will draw
The curtains of the tragedy hereafter. Massinger, Guardian.

An induction to those succeeding evils, which pursued that inconsiderate marriage. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 118.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts, Logick.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phænomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton, Opticks.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act of giving possession to the person, who has received institution of his church; by virtue of a mandate from the archdeacon, empowering another clergyman to induct him into the real, actual, and corporal possession of his rectory or vicarage; first laying his hand on the key of the church, in the church door; and the incumbent afterwards tolling one of the bells. See INDUCTOR. Institution is the investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; induction, of the temporal.

In dignities possession is given by instalment; in rectories and vicarages, by induction. Blackstone.

INDU'CTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton, P. L.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatements may take away infallible concludency in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

INDU'CTIVELY.* adv. [from inductive.] By induction; by inference.

This I shall make appear inductively, by recounting the several ends and intents, to which, with any colour of reason, it may be designed. South, Serm. vii. 197.

INDU'CTOR.* n. s. [from induct.] The person who inducts another into a benefice.

He puts the incumbent into possession of the church, who, when he has tolled a bell, comes forth; and the inductor indorses a certificate of such his induction on the warrant of the archdeacon, attested by those who were present. Directions, &c. Clergyman's Assist. (2d edit.) p. 312. note.

To INDU'E.† v. a. [induo, Lat.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

Diana's shape and habit then indued,
He said; My huntress, &c. Sandys, Ovid, B. 2.
One first matter all,

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence. Dr. Johnson. — This, however, is more fully explained under the second sense of To ENDUE.

The angel, by whom God indued the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His powers, with dreadful strength indu'd. Chapman.

INDU'EMENT.* n. s. [from indue.] Endowment. Not now in use.

Solomon's experience should disabuse all men in relying upon the virtue of their spirit, when we see that his so singular induement with the holy spirit was not security against the danger of this presumption. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 170.

To INDU'LGE.† v. a. [indulgeo, Lat.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryden.

2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in: as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness. It has sometimes, though rarely, to.

By the excess of pleasures, which he indulged to himself, he was indeed without the true delight and relish of any. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 681.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

3. To grant not of right, but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

The virgin ent'ring bright, indulg'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden, Juv.
My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atrides. Pope, Odyss.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

To INDU'LGE.† v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Gov. of the Tongue.

INDU'LGENCE.†
INDU'LGENCY. } n. s. [indulgence, Fr. from indulge.]

1. Fondness; fond of kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton, P. L.
The glories of our isle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.

Your majesty is still pleased, by the excellency of your nature, and by the indulgency of your judgement, to accept honest zeal for discretion. Wotton, Dispatch dated 1620, Rem. p. 524.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less. Hammond on Fundamentals.

In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as the indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Compliance with; gratification of: as, self-indulgence: indulgence in any vice.

The loosenesses and indulgences of this age — bear a proportion with the religion of the Ottomans. Sir R. Tempest, Entert. of Solit. (1649,) p. 5.

5. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves. Dr. Johnson. — This is a definition of it according to one of that church: "The true meaning and signification of indulgences, and their efficacy, consists in this, viz. that it is a release of the temporal penalty remaining due to sin, after the guilt thereof, and the eternal punishment entailed on it, had been remitted in the sacrament of penance, or through a sincere and unfeigned contrition." Important Inquiry, &c. 2d edit. 1758, p. 227. — The church of Rome makes a distinction also of partial and plenary indulgence. See the example from bishop Jeremy Taylor. The exposition of the present sense of indulgences, in the unanswerable remarks of one of the brightest ornaments of the Protestant church, must also here follow. "The doctrine of indulgences, as it was before the council of Trent, and hath been since taught in the church of Rome, is big with gross errors. It depends on the fiction of purgatory; it supposeth a superfluity of the satisfactions of the saints; which, being jumbled together (horreo referens) with the merits and satisfaction of our Saviour, make up one treasury of the church; that the bishop of Rome keeps the key of it, as having the sole power of granting indulgences, either by himself immediately, or by others commissioned from him. Lastly, it very absurdly extends the effect of the power of the keys, left by Christ in his church, to men in the other world." Bishop Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome, in Ans. to the Bishop of Meaux's Queries.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,
I'll canvass thee. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton, P. L.

Your best way is to get a plenary indulgence; and that may be had on reasonable terms: but take heed you do not think yourself secure; for a plenary indulgence does not do all that it may be you require; for there is an indulgence more full, and another most full; and it is not agreed upon among the doctors, whether a plenary indulgence is to be extended beyond the taking off those penances, which were actually enjoined by the confessor, or how far they go further. Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, § 4.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDU'LGENT. adj. [indulgent, Fr. indulgens, Lat.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to: with of.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden, Æn.

INDULGE'NTIAL.* adj. [from indulgent.] Relating to the indulgences of the Romish church.

You are fitted with rare indulgential privileges. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at End. ch. 10.

INDU'LGENTLY.† adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity; without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

Ills?—There are none; All-gracious, none from Thee!—
Whose threats are mercies, whose injunctions guides,
Assisting, not restraining, reason's choice;
Whose sanctions, unavoidable results
From nature's course, indulgently reveal'd. Young, Night Th. 9.

INDU'LGER.* n. s. [from indulge.] One who indulges.

If, as Saint Peter saith, the severest watchers of their nature have task hard enough, what shall be hoped of the indulgers of it? W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 160.

INDU'LT.† } n. s. [Ital. and Fr.] Privilege or exemption.
INDU'LTO. }

It was a tax laid upon the English a great many years ago, with their own consent, for the privilege of going to Aleppo. — This is a most scandalous indulto. Drummond, Trav. (dat. 1746,) p. 180.

To I'NDURATE. v. n. [induro, Lat.] To grow hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in corallines. Brown, Vulg. Err

To I'NDURATE.† v. a.

1. To make hard.

Glass may be so indurated by fire, that it may scorn the force of the hammer. Gayton on D. Quix. (1654.)

A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp, Surgery.

2. To harden the mind; to sear the conscience.

Love's and friendship's finely pointed dart
Fall blunted from each indurated heart. Goldsmith, Traveller.

I'NDURATE.* adj. [from the verb.]

1. Impenitent; hard of heart; obdurate.

After he hath passed one yere and a half in repentaunce, — then, lest he maie be indurate, let him be admitted to the receiving of the body and bloud of Christ. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.)

Thine heart is full hard, indurate, as was the heart of Pharao. Fox, Acts, &c. Exam. of W. Thorpe.

O insensible, indurate, and intolerable unthankfulness of the sons of Adam! Loe, Bliss of Br. Beauty, (1614,) p. 13.

2. Hard; not soft; dried; made hard.

Dried, souced, indurate fish. Burton, Anat of Mel. p. 70.

Avoid at all times indurate, salt, and especially spice and windy meat. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 402.

INDURA'TION. n. s. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard.

This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The act of hardening.

3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Chr. Piety.

INDU'STRIOUS. adj. [industrieux, Fr. industrius, Lat.]

1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous: opposed to slothful.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser on Ireland.

Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership. Shakspeare.

His thoughts were low:
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton, P. L.

3. Designed; done for the purpose.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. More, Divine Dialogues.

Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an concasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts on the Mind.

INDU'STRIOUSLY.† adv. [from industrious.]

1. With habitual diligence; not idly.
 And of myselfe industriously inclin'd. Mir. for Mag. p. 525.

2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.
 Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

3. For the set purpose; with design.
 Some friends to vice industriously defend
 These innocent diversions, and pretend
 That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden, Juv.
 I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

I'NDUSTRY.† n. s. [industrie, Fr. industria, Latin. "Industry hath not bene so long time used in the Englysh tongue, as providence: wherefore, it is the more straunge, and requireth the more plaine exposition. It is a qualitie proceeding of witte and experience, by the which a man perceyveth quicklye, inventeth freshlye, and counseyleth speedily. Wherefore they, that be called industrious, doo moste craftely and deepely understande in all affairs what is expedient, and by what means and wayes they may soonest exployte them." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73.] Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laboriousness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakspeare, Cymb.
 See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry. Cowley.
 Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

INDWE'LLER.* n. s. [in and dwell.] An inhabitant.
 Too true that land's indwellers since have found.
 Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 55.

 He all his Father full express'd
 Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton, P. L.

INEFFE'CTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effective.] That which can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.
 As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Bp. Taylor.
 He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glanville.

INEFFE'CTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; wanting power.
 The publick reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they mislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good.
 Hooker.
 The death of Patrocles, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFE'CTUALLY.† adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.
 In nineteen days' time there were above 1000 great shot spent ineffectually on the brave loyalists, who held out against the menaces of Manchester's whole army.
 Ashmole, Hist of Berks, ii. 286.

INEFFE'CTUALNESS. n. s. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.
 St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFICA'CIOUS adj. [inefficace, Fr. inefficax, Latin.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and inefficacious, an habitual impotence to any effect.
 Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFICA'CIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from inefficacious.] Want of power to perform the proper effect.
 To this we may probably impute that strange inefficaciousness we see of the word: Alas! men rarely apply it to the right place. Lively Oracles, &c. p. 194.

INE'FFICACY. n. s. [in and efficacia, Lat.] Want of power; want of effect.

INEFFI'CIENCY.* n. s. [in and efficiency.] Want of power; inactivity.

INE'LEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful; opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix
Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindliest change. Milton, P. L.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.

Modern criticks, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Broome on the Odyssey.

INE'LEGANTLY.* adv. [from inelegant.]

1. Not becomingly; not beautifully.

The pediment of the southern transept is pinnacled, not inelegantly, with a flourished cross. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

2. Coarsely; without ornament of language.

Nor will he, if he have the least taste or application; talk inelegantly. Ld. Chesterfield.

In an invocation to rime, while he is not inelegantly illustrating the pleasingness of an easy association of consonant syllables, he artfully intermixes the severities of satire. Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 60.

INE'LOQUENT.† adj. [in and eloquens, Lat.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men,
Nor tongue ineloquent. Milton, P. L.

INELU'CTABLE.* adj. [ineluctabilis, Lat.] Not to be avoided or overcome. Cockeram.

As if the damnation of all sinners now were ineluctable and eternal. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

Most pressing reasons, and ineludible demonstrations. Glanville, Pre-Exist. p. 14.

INENARRA'BLE.* adj. [inenarrable, old French; inenarrabilis, Lat.] Not capable of being told; inexpressible. Cockeram.

INE'PT.† adj. [inepte, old Fr. ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of nature being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways,
Their fruitless labour, and inept essays,
No cause of these appearances they'll find,
But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INE'PTITUDE. n. s. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray on the Creation.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbuthnot.

INE'PTLY. adv. [inepté, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanville.

INE'PTNESS.* n. s. [from inept.] Unfitness.

The feebleness and miserable ineptness of infancy. More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, (1647,) Pref.

INE'QUAL.* adj. [inegal, Fr. inæqualis, Lat.] This is the ancient form of our word unequal, used by Chaucer, and given in the old dictionary of Barret, viz. "*a*n inequal or unjust contention." In modern times, Shenstone often uses it.

Welcome all toils the inequal fates decree;
While toils endear thy faithful charge to thee. Shenstone, Judg. of Hercules.

He, not imprudent, at the sight declin'd
The inequal conflict. Shenstone, Econ. P. ii.

INEQUA'LITY. n. s. [inegalité, Fr. from inæqualitas, Lat.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton, Opt.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situationof woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INE'QUITABLE.* adj. [in and equitable.] Not equitable; unjust.

The way of process men take in this affair is so inequitable, as certainly presages the partiality of the sentence. Dec. of Chr. Piety, p. 64.

INE'RRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from errour.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INE'RRABLENESS. n. s. [from inerrable.] Exemption from errour.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on, Hammond on Fundamentals.

INE'RRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from errour; infallibly.

INE'RRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without errour; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

INE'RT, adj. [iners, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute you'll find;
The cause of all things is by you assigned. Blackmore.
Informer of the planetary train!
Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs
Were brute unlively mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INE'RTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.
Ye powers,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong. Pope, Dunciad.

INE'RTNESS.* n. s. [from inert.] Want of motion.

INESCA'TION.† n. s. [in and esca, Lat.] The act of baiting.
Herein lies true fortitude and courage, in overcoming all the deceitful allurements and inescations of flesh and blood. Hallywell, Excell. of Moral Virtue, (1692,) p. 107

INE'STIMABLE. adj. [inestimable, Fr. inestimabilis, Lat.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality. Abbot.
There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us, upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits. Boyle.
And shall this prize, the inestimable prize,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze! Pope.

INE'STIMABLY.* adv. [from inestimable.] So as not to be sufficiently rated.
Things inestimably excellent. More, Sleep of the Soul, iii. iii. 7.
Heavenly and instructive volumes, inestimably overvaluing any the earth affords. Boyle, Style of Hol. Script. p. 87.

INE'VIDENCE.* n. s. [in and evidence.] Obscurity; uncertainty.
Charge them, says St. Paul, that they trust not in uncertain riches, that is, in the obscurity or inevidence of riches. Barrow, Works, i. 1449.

INE'VIDENT.† adj. [inevident, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Brown. It is a word, however, which boasts better authority than that of Brown; and has been adopted, from them, by a modern author of eminence. See also INEVIDENCE.
Our schoolmen make a distinction of a certainty; evident and inevident. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 267.
The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown, Vulg. Err.
The object of faith is inevident. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 556.
"Faith is the evidence of things not seen;" by which words I conceive we may understand an undoubting assent to those things which are of themselves inevident. Bp. Conybeare, Serm. vol. ii. S. 8.

INEVITABI'LITY.† n. s. [from inevitable.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.
By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.
The overthrow is described to be given as it were by a double blow and a twofold weapon, to shew the certainty and inevitability of it. Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 289.

INE'VITABLE. adj. [inevitable, Fr. inevitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.
I had a pass with him: — he gives me the stuck-in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.
Fate inevitable
Subdues us. Milton, P. L.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

INE'VITABLENESS.* n. s. [from inevitable.] Certainty; inevitability.
The inevitableness of the account we are to make, and the uncertainty of the time we shall be called to it. Bp. Prideaux, Euchol. p. 106.

INE'VITABLY. adv. [from inevitable.] Without possibility of escape.
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgrest, inevitably thou shalt die. Milton, P. L.
How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh? South.
If they look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.
Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole. Harvey on Consumptions.
If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silentest nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder. Bentley.

INEXCU'SABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusabilis, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.
It is a temerity and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power. L'Estrange.
As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account. Addison, Freeholder.
Such a favour could only render them more obdurate, and more inexcusable: it would inhance their guilt. Atterbury.
If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive. Swift.
A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle, the sex is warned against the delusions of men. Richardson, Clarissa.

INEXCU'SABLENESS. n. s. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.
Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition of this very thing, that they knew God, but for all that did not glorify him as God. South, Serm. ii. 263.

INEXCU'SABLY.† adv. [from inexcusable.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.
Behold here wherein Eve, and after her Adam, did fail inexcusably! Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 35.
It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention. Brown.

INEXHA'LABLE. adj. [in and exhale.] That which cannot evaporate.
A new-laid egg, will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhalable parts into consistence. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INEXHA'USTED.† adj. [in and exhausted.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.
So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,
An early, rich, and inexhausted vein. Dryden.
Let us consider the ample provision of waters, those inexhausted treasures of the ocean. Bentley, Serm. viii.

INEXHAU'STIBLE. adj. [in and exhaustible.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite. Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum. Locke.

INEXHA'USTIBLENESS.* n. s. The state or quality of being inexhaustible. Scott.

INEXHA'USTIVE.* adj. [in and exhaust.] Not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Whose power,
To life approaching, may perfume my lays
With that fine oil, those aromatick gales,
That inexhaustive flow continual round. Thomson, Spring.

INEXI'STENT. adj. [in and existent.]

1. Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Existing in something else. This use is rare.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained. Boyle.

INEXI'STENCE.† n. s. [in and existence.]

1. Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem. Broome on the Odyss.

2. State of existing; inherence. So used by South, but improperly.

Concerning these gifts, we must observe also, that there was no small difference amongst them, as to the manner of their inexistence in the persons who had them. South, Serm. iii. 414.

INEXORABI'LITY.* n. s. [from inexorable.] The state or quality of being inexorable.

Your father's inexorability not only grieves but amazes me. Johnson, Letter in Boswell's Life of him.

INE'XORABLE. adj. [inexorable, Fr. inexorabilis, Lat.] Not to be entreated; not to be moved by entreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
Oh ten times more, than tygers of Hyrcania! Shakspeare.
Inexorable dog. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.
The scourge
Inexorable calls to penance. Milton, P. L.
The guests invited came,
And with the rest th' inexorable dame. Dryden.
Th' inexorable gates were barr'd,
And nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe. Pope, St. Cecilia.

We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations. Rogers.

INE'XORABLY.* adv. [from inexorable.] So as not to be moved by entreaty.

Phocion the good, in publick life severe,
To virtue still inexorably firm. Thomson, Winter.

INEXPECTA'TION.* n. s. [in and expectation.] State of having no expectation, either with hope or fear; want of forethought.

It is therefore fit, we take heed of such things as are like multiplying glasses, and shew fears either more numerous or bigger far, than they are. Such are inexpectation, unacquaintance, want of preparation. Inexpectation: the sudden blow astonishes; but, foreseen, is either warded or avoided. A surprize alone is torture. Feltham, Res. ii. 5.

INEXPE'CTED.* adj. [inexpectatus, Lat.] Not expected.

If the suddenness of an inexpected evil have surprized his thoughts, and infected his cheeks with paleness: he hath no sooner digested it in his conceit, than he gathers up himself, and insults over mischief. Bp. Hall, Charact. p. 34.

Our greatest ills we least mistrust, my lord,
And inexpected harms do hurt us most. Kyd, Span. Trag.

INEXPE'CTEDLY.* adv. [from inexpected.] Without expectation.

Such marvellous light opened itself inexpectedly to us. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

INEXPE'DIENCE. } n. s. [in and expediency.] Want
INEXPE'DIENCY. } of fitness; want of propriety; unsuitableness to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiours to look well to the expediency and inexpediency of what they enjoin in indifferent things. Sanderson.

INEXPE'DIENT. adj. [in and expedient.] Inconvenient; unfit; improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chymical affairs. Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse, if God should see them to be inexpedient. Smalridge.

INEXPE'RIENCE. n. s. [inexperience, Fr. in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random
Argue thine inexperience. Milton, P. L.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexperience of the world, and ignorance of mankind. Addison.

INEXPE'RIENCED.† adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Not experienced.

They fright all inexperienced young men, from any tolerable compliance in matters of religion. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 227.

INEXPE'RT.† adj. [inexpertus, Lat. in and expert.] Unskilful; unskilled.

It must be considered,—whether he be learned or ignorant; whether skilful in languages and arts, or whether inexpert in both. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

The race elect
Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance
Through the wild desert, not the readiest way;
Lest, entering on the Canaanite alarm'd,
War terrify them inexpert. Milton, P. L.
In letters and in laws
Not inexpert. Prior.

INE'XPIABLE.† adj. [inexpiable, Fr. inexpiabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be atoned.

A papist writes it; and then it is well enough. For some of our writers to have said but as much, or scarce so much as these, in this matter and manner, in them is an inexpiable transgression. Dr. Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Nov. (1619,) p. 223.

It is such an inexpiable crime in poets, to tax vices generally. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.

Love seeks to have love:
My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the way
To raise in me inexpiable hate? Milton, S. A.

INE'XPIABLY. adv. [from inexpiable.] To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are inexpiably bad,
And 'tis much safer to leave out than add. Roscommon.

INEXPLA'INABLE.* adj. [in and explainable.] That cannot be explained. Cockeram.

INE'XPLEABLY. adv. [in and expleo, Lat.] Insatiably. A word not in use.

INE'XPLICABLE. adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explico, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible; not to be disentangled.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor? Hooker.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than pression or motion propagated through ether. Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,
Than this obscure inexplicable power. Blackmore.

INE'XPLICABLENESS.* n. s. [from inexplicable.] The state or quality of being inexplicable. Ash.

INE'XPLICABLY.† adv. [from inexplicable.] In a manner not to be explained.

The power of godliness is denied by wicked men. How then? What is their case? Surely inexplicably, unconceivably fearful. Bp. Hall, The Hypocrite, Works, ii. 302.

INEXPLO'RABLE.* adj. [inexploratus, Lat.] Not to be discovered.

It was the king's own immovable and inexplorable doom. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. (1646,) p. 82.

INEXPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and express.] Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs
Of circuit inexpressible they stood,

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexpressible communications. South.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name, but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being. Stillingfleet.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words; and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives so inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied. Dryden.

INEXPRE'SSIBLY. adv. [from inexpressible.] To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant. Hammond.

He began to play upon it: the sound was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious. Addison, Spect.

INEXPRE'SSIVE.* adj. [See UNEXPRESSIVE.] Ineffable. Dr. Johnson has been publickly blamed for not inserting inexpressive, in his Dictionary, because "Milton makes such fine use of it in his Lycidas." The word in Lycidas is unexpressive; so it is in the same poet's Ode on the Nativity, from which Dr. Johnson has inaccurately cited it, as if it were inexpressive. Nor is it inexpressive in Shakspeare, whose poetry is also miscited. Nor am I able to give an example of inexpressive.

INEXPU'GNABLE.† adj. [inexpugnable, Fr. inexpugnabilis, Lat.] Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

He may have fortified himself in some inexpugnable castle or fortress. Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. iv. 19.

Fortified, as it were, with a trench and pallisado, and with inexpugnable endowments. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 95.

Philip, king of Macedon, thought of cities, There is none so inexpugnable, but an ass laden with gold may enter them. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1637,) ii. 4.

There is one objection, — which the Smectymnians press thrice, as being inexpugnable. Bp. Morton, Episcopacy, Assert. p. 88.

This castle — was accounted inexpugnable. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 89.

INEXTI'NCT.* adj. [inextinctus, Latin.] Not quenched; not put out. Cockeram.

INEXTI'NGUISHABLE.† adj. [inextinguible, Fr. in and extinguo, Lat. Our own word was formerly, like the French, inextinguible. "Perpetual motion, inextinguible lights." Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 281.] Unquenchable.

Pillars, statues, and other memorials, are a sort of shadow of an endless life, and show an inextinguishable desire which all men have of it. Grew.

INEXTI'RPABLE.* adj. [in and extirpable.] Not to be rooted out. Cockeram.

INE'XTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr. inextricabilis, Lat.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should tye inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not to have served his generation. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Stopt by awful heights, and gulphs immense
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze. Blackmore.

Men are led into inextricable mazes by setting up themselves as judges of the world. Sherlock.

INE'XTRICABLENESS.* n. s. [from inextricable.] The state or quality of being inextricable.

There is no perplexity in thee, my God, no inextricableness in thee. Donne, Devot. (1625,) p. 122.

INE'XTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.] To a degree of perplexity not to be disintangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inextricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals. Bentley.

In vain they strive; the intangling snares deny,
Inextricably firm, the power to fly. Pope, Odyss.

INEXU'PERABLE.* adj. [inexuperabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed over; not superable; not to be conquered. Cockeram.

To INE'YE. v. n. [in and eye.] To inoculate; to propagate trees by the insition of a bud into a foreign stock.

Let sage experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and ineying. Philips.

INFA'BRICATED.* adj. [infabricatus, Latin.] Unwrought. Cockeram.

INFALLIBI'LITY.† } n. s. [infallibilité, Fr. from infal-

Every cause admitteth not such infallible evidence of proof, as leaveth no possibility of doubt or scruple behind it. Hooker.

Believe my words;
For they are certain and infallible. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The success is certain and infallible, and none ever yet miscarried in the attempt. South.

INFA'LLIBLY. adv. [from infallible.]

1. Without danger from deceit; with security from errour.

We cannot be as God infallibly knowing good and evil. Smalridge, Serm.

2. Certainly.

Our blessed Lord has distinctly opened the scene of futurity to us, and directed us to such a conduct as will infallibly render us happy in it. Rogers.

To INFA'ME. v. a. [infamer, Fr. infamo, Lat.] To represent to disadvantage; to defame; to censure publickly; to make infamous; to brand. To defame is now used.

Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband. Bacon.

Hitherto obscur'd, infam'd,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end
Created. Milton, P. L.

I'NFAMOUS.† adj. [infame, infamant, Fr. infamis, Lat. It had the accent formerly on the second syllable.]

I'NFAMOUSLY.† adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with publick notoriety of reproach.

He that wrongs me, better I proclaim,
He never had assay'd to touch my fame:
For he shall weep, and walk with every tongue
Throughout the city, infamously sung. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

2. Shamefully; scandalously.

That poem was infamously bad. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

I'NFAMOUSNESS. } n. s. [infamie, Fr. infamia, Lat.]
I'NFAMY. } Publick reproach; notoriety of bad character.

Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people. Ezek. xxxvi. 3.

I'NFANCY. n. s. [infantia, Lat.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only Christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was so needful for the first universal conversion of Gentiles hating Christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came to attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend:
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences. Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one-and-twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement.

In Spain, our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryden.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INFA'NDOUS.* adj. [infandus, Lat.] So abominable as not to be expressed.

This infandous custom of swearing, I observe, reigns in England lately more than any where else; though a German, in highest puff of passions, swears a hundred thousand sacraments.
Howell, Lett. (dat. 1628,) i. v. 11.

INFA'NGTHEF, or hingfangtheft, or infangtheof, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition, in, fang, or fong, to take or catch, and thef. It signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. Cowel.

I'NFANT.† n. s. [enfant, Fr. infans, Lat. "The common word infant, Latin infans, comes not from in and fari, one who cannot speak, as our herd of lexicographers say; but from fa, to nourish, to feed, whence fari itself is derived.— Lye mentions fauntekin as an old English word, signifying an infant or little boy, which he rightly derives from the Icelandick fante, a young man; whence the Italian fante, a page or servant, and the French fantassin, a soldier who serves on foot, and of those whom we call infantry." Callander, Observ. on Two Anc. Scott. Poems, p. 65. See also INFANTRY.]

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education, serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise. Hooker.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days. Isa. lxv. 20.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear possest,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden, Æn.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one-and-twenty.

Male or female, till twenty-one years of age, is an infant, and so styled in law. Blackstone.

3. The title of a prince; as the Spaniards use the word.

The infant [Arthur] hearkened — to her tale.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 25.

The noble infant [Rinaldo] stood a space
Confused, speechless. Fairfax, Tass. xvi. 34.

I'NFANT. adj. Not mature; in a state of initial imperfection.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakspeare.

First the shrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscommon.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood. Dryden, Virg.

INFA'NTA.† n. s. [Spanish.] A princess descended from the royal blood of Spain.

What new-come power can so
Transplant a land, and all the people? O
Royal infanta, but a child in age,
Yet ev'n already as a matron sage,
The virtue of your name, power of your blood,
Great Catharina, (now 'tis understood,)
Wrought this; from that great house descended, which
New kingdoms daily, and new worlds enrich.
Fanshaw, Tr. of Pastor Fido, Prol.

INFA'NTICIDE.† n. s. [infanticide, Fr. infanticidium, Lat.]

1. The slaughter of the infants by Herod.

2. The act of slaughtering infants.

The madness did not cease to rage till it terminated in infanticide, or in offering up to their grim idols (instead of themselves) the children of their bowels.
Warburton, Div. Legat. ix. 2.

3. A slayer of infants.

Christians accounted those to be infanticides — who did but only expose their own infants.
Dr. Potter, Christophalgia, (1680,) p. 51.

I'NFANTILE. adj. [infantilis, Lat.] Pertaining to an infant.

The fly lies all the Winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity till the following Spring. Derham.

I'NFANTINE.* adj. [infantin, Fr. from infant.] Childish; young; tender. This word is old in our language, though it has escaped the notice of Dr. Johnson, and even of Ash. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give it.

The sole comfort of his declining years, almost in infantine imbecillity. Burke, Speech on the Marriage Act.

It might have been hazardous to expose its tender and infantine form to barbarous critics. Porson, Lett. to Travis, p. 117.

I'NFANTLIKE.* adj. [infant and like.] Like an infant's.

Your abilities are too infantlike for doing much alone. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I'NFANTLY.* adj. [from infant.] Like a child's.

He utters such single matter in so infantly a voice. Beaum. and Fl. Queen of Corinth.

I'NFANTRY.† n. s. [infanterie, Fr. infanteria, Ital. from fante, a servant; all from the Scandick fantur, a servant, an attendant. Hickes. See also INFANT.] The foot soldiers of an army.

The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infantry it requireth men bred in some free and plentiful manner. Bacon. Hen. VII.

That small infantry

To INFA'RCE.* v. a. [infarcio, Latin.] To stuff; to swell out. Huloet.

By fury chaunged into an horrible figure, his face infarced with rancour. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 99. b.

INFA'RCTION. n. s. [in and farcio, Lat.] Stuffing; constipation.

An hypochondriack consumption is occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the spleen. Harvey.

INFA'SHIONABLE.* adj. [in and fashionable.] Not fashionable.

His band
May be disorder'd, and transform'd from lace
To cutwork; his rich clothes be discomplexion'd
With blood, beside the infashionable slashes.
Beaum. and Fl. The Coronation.

INFA'TIGABLE.* adj. [infatigabilis, Lat.] Not to be wearied. This is the word of elder times. Bullokar, Cockeram, and Sherwood give it, in their vocabularies. We now say indefatigable.

To INFA'TUATE.† v. a. [infatuo, from in and fatuus, Latin; infatuer, French.] To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

He hath many other baits to inveigle and infatuate them farther yet. Burton, Anat of Mel. p. 657.

He those, who others rule,
Infatuates, and makes the judge a fool. Sandys, Job, p. 20.

It is not so much of a soporiferous quality to procure sleep, as to stupify and infatuate the intellect. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 337.

The judgement of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated, gentile world; a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it. Addison on Italy.

INFA'TUATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Stupified.

May hypocrites,
That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd; till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Philips.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrensy so extravagant, as theirs. Bentley.

INFATUA'TION. n. s. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. South.

INFA'USTING. n. s. [from infaustus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon, Hen. VII.

INFE'ASIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infeasible, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glanville.

INFE'ASIBLENESS.* n. s. [from infeasible.] Impracticability.

He began the work; and, being disabused in point of the indefeasibleness, pursued his task, and perfected it. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 117.

To INFE'CT. v. a. [infecter, Fr. infectus, Lat.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shakspeare.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shakspeare.

Every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the scepter his. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakspeare.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. Shakspeare.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat. Milton, P. L.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them! Shakspeare, Macbeth.

INFE'CT.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Infected; polluted.

Infecte with synne. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 11.

Are you not she,
For whose infect persuasions, I could scarce
Kneel out my prayers? Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy.

A blinded eye, a closed ear,
A hand with bribe infect. Harington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 54.

INFE'CTION. n. s. [infection, Fr. infectio, Lat.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakspeare, Cymb.

The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you
Do climate here. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Hence,
Lest that the infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INFE'CTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee! Shakspeare.
In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shakspeare.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFE'CTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakspeare.

INFE'CTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INFE'CTIVE.† adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidney.
There is no stink in the world so infective as they are.
Outred, Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, (1580,) fol. 190. b.
Command her, you grave beldam, that know better
My deadly resolutions; since I drew them
From the infective fountain of your own.
Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

INFECU'ND. n. s. [infæcundus, Lat.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham, Physico-Theol.

INFECU'NDITY.† n. s. [infæcunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness. Bullokar.

To INFE'EBLE.* See To ENFEEBLE. Huloet.

INFELI'CITY. n. s. [infelicité, Fr. infelicitas, Lat.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy. Glanville.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

INFEODA'TION.* See INFEUDATION.

To INFEO'FF.* See To ENFEOFF.

To INFE'R.† v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Lat.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Serena — fled away, afear'd
Of villany to be to her inferr'd. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 32.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou can'st attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be with-held
Thy hearing. Milton, P. L.
Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heaven so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton, P. L.

One would wonder how, from so differing premisses, they should all infer the same conclusion. Decay of Chr. Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I'NFERABLE.* adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds. This is the modern way of writing and pronouncing what was formerly inferible or rather inferrible, with the accent on the second syllable. See INFERIBLE.

A sufficient argument — is inferable from these premises. Burke.

I'NFERENCE. n. s. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFE'RIBLE.† adj. [from infer. It should be rather inferrible, as Sir T. Brown certainly wrote it; and as Dr. Johnson himself writes referrible; though in the first of the following examples he has given it inferible.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premisses. Brown.

That Sodom could not be far from Segor, which was seated under the mountains near the side of the lake, seems inferrible from the sudden arrival of Lot, who, coming from Sodom at day-break, attained to Segor at sun-rising.
Brown, Miscell. p. 164.

INFERIO'RITY. n. s. [inferiorité, Fr. from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFE'RIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferieur, Fr.]

1. Lower in place.
2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps
Superiour, for inferiour who is free? Milton, P. L.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFE'RIOUR. n. s. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdaining him. South.

INFE'RNAL.† adj. [infernal, Fr. infernus, Lat.] Hellish; tartarean; detestable.

His gigantick limbs, with large embrace,
Infolds nine acres of infernal space. Dryden, Æn.

The instruments or abettors in such infernal dealings.
Addison, Spect. No. 243.

INFE'RNAL Stone. n. s.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill, Mat. Med.

INFE'RTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Gov. of the Tongue.

INFERTI'LITY. n. s. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To INFE'ST. v. a. [infester, Fr. infesto, Lat.] To harass; to disturb: to plague.

Unto my feeble breast
Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes dost enrage. Spenser.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause. Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hooker.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions infest human life. Addison, Spect.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFE'ST.* adj. [infestus, Lat.] Mischievous; hurtful; dangerous. Obsolete.

He stayed not t' advise which way were best
His foe t' assayle, or how himselfe to gard,
But with fierce fury and with force infest
Upon him ran. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 5.

INFESTA'TION.* n. s. [infestation, Fr. infestatio, Lat.] Molestation; disturbance; annoyance.

Touching the infestation of pirates, he hath been careful. Bacon, Speech in the Star-Ch. (1617.)

They should dwell in safety, free from the infestation of enemies. Donne, Devot. (1625,) p. 102.

These bodily vexations and infestations. Hallywell, Melampr. (1681,) p. 47.

INFE'STERED.† adj. [in and fester.] Rankling; inveterate. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Spenser's Muiopotmos, where the true word is enfested, ver. 354.; i. e. mischievous. See also the adjective INFEST, which Spenser uses in like manner; and INFESTUOUS, so employed by Bacon.

INFE'STIVE.* adj. [in and festive.] Without mirth or pleasantness. Cockeram.

INFESTI'VITY. n. s. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.

INFE'STUOUS.* adj. [infestus, Lat. See INFEST.] Mischievous; dangerous.

The natural pravity and clownish malignity of the vulgar sort are, unto princes, as infestuous as serpents. Bacon.

INFEUDA'TION.† n. s. [infeudation, Fr. in and feudum, Lat.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infeudation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale, Comm. Law.

I had composed a large collection of the infeodations of church-lands. Johnston, Assurance of Abby-Lands, p. 30.

I'NFIDEL. n. s. [infidele, Fr. infidelis, Lat.] An unbeliever; a miscreant; a pagan; one who rejects Christianity.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

I'NFIDEL.* adj. [infidele, Fr.] Unbelieving; characteristick of an unbeliever.

You have written what you dreamed in your sleepe, rather than what you learned of any author catholyke or infidele. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 369.

Their old infidel invaders. Hurd on Chivalry and Romance.

The parliament [may be] not infidel. They "deplore the infidelity of that parliament." Bold words these, indeed! Bp. Horne, Letters on Infidelity, L. 15.

INFIDE'LITY. n. s. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison, Spect.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

I'NFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus, Lat.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

I'NFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound. Shakspeare.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

I'NFINITENESS. n. s. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Bp. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL.† adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

The notion or idea of an infinitesimal quantity, as it is an object simply apprehended by the mind, hath been already considered. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 18.

INFI'NITIVE. † adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Lat.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

The mode is the manner of representing the being, action, or passion. When it is simply declared, or a question is asked concerning it, it is called the indicative mode.—When it is barely expressed, without any limitation of person or number, it is called the infinitive. Lowth, Introduct. Eng. Grammar.

INFI'NITUDE. n. s. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milton, P. L.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that imcompossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison, Spect.

INFI'NITY. n. s. [infinité, Fr. infinitas, Lat.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Ralegh, Hist.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. An hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFI'RM. adj. [infirme, Fr. infirmus, Lat.]

1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.

Here stand I your brave;
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakspeare.

2. Weak of mind; irresolute.

I am afraid to think what I have done:
Look on't again, I dare not.
——Infirm of purpose;
Give me the dagger. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty, and infirmer sex, forgiven;
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton, P. L.

Their influence dreaded, as their ways unknown. Prior.

2. Ascendant power; power of directing or modifying. It was anciently followed by into; now, less properly, by upon.

Incomparable lady, your commandment doth not only give me the will, but the power to obey you; such influence hath your excellency. Sidney.

God hath his influence into the very essence of all things, without which influence of Deity supporting them, their utter annihilation could not chuse but follow. Hooker.

A wise man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

Religion hath so great an influence upon the felicity of men, that it ought to be upheld, not only out of a dread of the divine vengeance in another world, but out of regard to temporal prosperity. Tillotson.

Our inconsistency in the pursuit of schemes thoroughly digested, has a bad influence on our affairs. Addison.

So astonishing a scene would have present influence upon them, but not produce a lasting effect. Atterbury.

Where it ought to have greatest influence, this obvious indisputable truth is little regarded. Rogers.

To I'NFLUENCE.† v. a. [from the noun. Addison has used the following expression: "To influence the reader with pity and compassion towards them." Spect. No. 357. Upon which bishop Hurd justly remarks, that it is hard and scarcely allowable. "When we use influence as a verb," he says, "we use it absolutely; as, such considerations influenced him; that is, had an effect or influence upon him; without specifying the effect produced. He had expressed himself better, if he had said, to fill the reader's mind with; or, to engage the reader's pity."] To act upon with directive or impulsive power; to modify to any purpose; to guide or lead to any end.

These experiments succeed after the same manner in vacuo as in the open air, and therefore are not influenced by the weight or pressure of the atmosphere. Newton, Opticks.

This standing revelation was attested in the most solemn and credible manner; and is sufficient to influence their faith and practice, if they attend. Atterbury.

All the restraint men are under is, by the violation of one law, broken through; and the principle which influenced their obedience has lost its efficacy on them. Rogers.

I'NFLUENT. adj. [influens, Lat.] Flowing in.

The chief intention of chirurgery, as well as medicine, is keeping a just equilibrium between the influent fluids and vascular solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INFLUE'NTIAL. adj. [from influence.] Exerting influence or power.

Our now overshadowed souls may be emblemed by those crusted globes, whose influential emissions are interrupted by the interposal of the benighted element. Glanville.

The inward springs and wheels of the corporal machine, on the most sublimed intellectuals, are dangerously influential. Glanville.

INFLUE'NTIALLY.* adv. [from influential.] In a manner so as to direct.

Embrace not the opacous and blind side of opinions, but that which looks most luciferously and influentially unto goodness. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

I'NFLUX. n. s. [influxus, Lat.]

1. Act of flowing into any thing.

We will enquire whether there be, in the footsteps of nature, any such transmission and influx of immateriate virtues, and what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If once contracted in a systole, by the influx of the spirits, why, the spirits continually flowing in without let, doth it not always remain so? Ray on the Creation.

An elastick fibre, like a bow, the more extended, it restores itself with the greater force: if the spring be destroyed, it is like a bag, only passive as to the influx of the liquid. Arbuthnot.

2. Infusion; intromission.

There is another life after this; and the influx of the knowledge of God, in relation to this everlasting life, is infinitely of moment. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Influence; power. In this sense it is now not used.

Adam, in innocence, might have held, by the continued influx of the divine will and power, a state of immortality. Hale.

To INFRI'GIDATE. v. a. [in and frigidus, Lat.] To chill; to make cold.

The drops reached little further than the surface of the liquor, whose coldness did not infrigidate those upper parts of the glass. Boyle.

INFRIGIDA'TION.* n. s. [from To infrigidate.] The act of rendering cold.

Madam de Bourignon — used to boast, that she had not only the spirit of continency in herself, but that she had also the power of communicating it to all who beheld her. This the scoffers of those days called the gift of infrigidation; and took occasion from it to rally her face, rather than admire her virtue. Tatler, No. 126.

To INFRI'NGE. v. a. [infringo, Lat.]

1. To violate; to break laws or contracts.

Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first man that did th' edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
Having infring'd the law, I wave my right
As king, and thus submit myself to fight. Waller.

2. To destroy; to hinder.

Homilies, being plain and popular instructions, do not infringe the efficacy, although but read. Hooker.

To INFU'SE. v. a. [infuser, Fr. infusus, Lat.]

1. To pour in; to instil.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

Why should he desire to have qualities infused into his son, which himself never possessed? Swift.

2. To pour into the mind; to inspire into.

For when God's hand had written in the hearts
Of our first parents all the rules of good,
So that their skill infus'd surpass'd all arts
That ever were before, or since the flood. Davies.
Sublime ideas, and apt words infuse;
The muse instruct my voice, and thou inspire the muse. Roscommon.
He infus'd
Bad influence into the unwary breast. Milton, P. L.

Infuse into their young breasts such a noble ardour as will make them renowned. Milton on Education.

Meat must be with money bought;
She therefore, upon second thought,
Infus'd, yet as it were by stealth,
Some small regard for state and wealth. Swift.

3. To steep in any liquor with a gentle heat; to macerate so as to extract the virtues of any thing without boiling.

Take violets, and infuse a good pugil of them in a quart of vinegar. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To make an infusion with any ingredient; to supply, to tincture, to saturate with any thing infused. Not used.

Drink, infused with flesh, will nourish faster and easier than meat and drink together. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. To inspire with. Not used.

Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heav'n. Shakspeare, Tempest.
Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms. Shakspeare.

INFU'SE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Infusion. Not in use.

Vouchsafe to shed into my barren spright
Some little drop of thy celestial dew,
That may my rhimes with sweet infuse embrew.
Spenser, Hymns.

INFU'SER.* n. s. [from infuse.] He who pours into the mind.

The sole infuser of grace. Dr. White, Serm. (1615,) p. 33.

INFU'SIBLE. adj. [from infuse.]

1. Possible to be infused.

From whom the doctrines being infusible into all, it will be more necessary to forewarn all of the danger of them.
Hammond.

2. Incapable of dissolution; not fusible; not to be melted.

Vitrification is the last work of fire, and a fusion of the salt and earth, wherein the fusible salt draws the earth and infusible part into one continuum. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INFU'SION. n. s. [infusion, Fr. infusio, Lat.]

1. The act of pouring in; instillation.

Our language has received innumerable elegancies and improvements from that infusion of Hebraisms, which are derived to it out of the poetical passages in holy writ. Addison.

2. The act of pouring into the mind; inspiration.

We participate Christ partly by imputation, as when those things which he did and suffered for us are imputed to us for righteousness; partly by habitual and real infusion, as when grace is inwardly bestowed on earth, and afterwards more fully both our souls and bodies in glory. Hooker.

3. Suggestion; whisper.

They found it would be matter of great debate, and spend much time; during which they did not desire their company, nor to be troubled with their infusions. Clarendon.

Here his folly and his wisdom are of his own growth, not the echo or infusion of other men. Swift.

4. The act of steeping any thing in moisture without boiling.

Repeat the infusion of the body oftener. Bacon.

5. The liquor made by infusion.

To have the infusion strong, in those bodies which have finer spirits, repeat the infusion of the body oftener. Bacon.

INFU'SIVE. adj. [from infuse.] Having the power of infusion, or being infused. A word not authorised.

Still let my song a nobler note assume,
And sing the infusive force of Spring on man. Thomson.

ING.* See INGE.

I'NGATE. n. s. [in and gate.] Entrance; passage in. An old word.

One noble person — stoppeth the ingate of all that evil which is looked for, and holdeth in all those which are at his beck.
Spenser on Ireland.

INGANNA'TION.† n. s. [ingannare, Italian.] Cheat; fraud; deception; juggle; delusion; imposture; trick; slight. A word neither used nor necessary.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial ingannations from others, are within the line of vulgarity. Brown.

INGA'THERING. n. s. [in and gathering.] The act of getting in the harvest.

Thou shalt keep the feast of ingathering, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field. Exod. xxiii. 16.

INGE.† n. s. [inᵹ, Saxon; ing, Danish; eng, Swed.] A common pasture or meadow.

In the names of places, inge signifies a meadow, from the Saxon inᵹ, of the same import. Gibson's Camden.

High conceits ingendering pride. Milton, P. L.

To INGE'NDER.* v. n. To come together; to join.

The council of Trent, and the Spanish inquisition, ingendering together, brought forth those catalogues and expurging indexes. Milton, Areopagitica.

INGE'NDERER.* See ENGENDERER.

INGE'NERABLE. adj. [in and generate.] Not to be produced or brought into being.

Divers naturalists esteem the air, as well as other elements, to be ingenerable and incorruptible. Boyle.

To INGE'NERATE.* v. a. [ingenero, Lat.] To beget; to produce.

A natural ceremony both to express and ingenerate, or encrease, this lowliness of disposition. Mede, Disc. xli.

Those noble habits are ingenerated in the soul; as religion, gratitude, obedience, and tranquillity. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Virtues are ingenerated in our souls, by due submission of this will to the Divine Will.
Spiritual Conflict, (1652,) P. i. p. 51.

INGE'NERATE. } INGE'NERATED. } adj. [ingeneratus, Latin.]

1. Inborn; innate; inbred.

Those virtues were rather feigned and affected things to serve his ambition, than true qualities ingenerate in his judgement or nature. Bacon, Hen. VII.

In divers children their ingenerate and seminal powers lie deep, and are of slow disclosure. Wotton on Education.

2. Unbegotten. Not commonly used.

Yet shall we demonstrate the same, from persons presumed as far from us in condition as time; that is, our first and ingenerated forefathers. Brown.

INGE'NIOUS.† adj. [ingenieux, Fr. ingeniosus, Latin. This word, in our old writers, is often improperly used for ingenuous. The complaint was made by Coles in his dictionary, 1677. But the confusion continued till the beginning of the last century. Mr. Reed says, that in the first edition of the Spectator, it occurs: "A parent who forces a child of a liberal and ingenious spirit." No. 437. So Hearne, in Leland's Itinerary, speaks of "Mr Dodwell's pleasant and ingenious countenance." Pegge, Anonym. vi. 52.]

1. Witty; inventive; possessed of genius.

'Tis a per'lous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable. Shakspeare.

Our ingenious friend Cowley not only has employed much eloquence to persuade that truth in his preface, but has in one of his poems given a noble example of it. Boyle.

The more ingenious men are, the more they are apt to trouble themselves. Temple.

2. Mental; intellectual. Not in use.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract. Shakspeare.

INGE'NIOUSLY. adv. [from ingenious.] Wittily; subtily.

I will not pretend to judge by common fears, or the schemes of men too ingeniously politick. Temple.

INGE'NIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ingenious.] Wittiness; subtilty; strength of genius.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGE'NITE. adj. [ingenitus, Latin.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rasa tabula; and that notions are not ingenite, and imprinted by the finger of Nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. South.

We give them this ingenite, moving force,
That makes them always downward take their course. Blackmore.

INGENU'ITY. n. s. [ingenuité, Fr. from ingenuous.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or other of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Wotton.

My constancy I to the planets give;
My truth, to them who at the court do live;
Mine ingenuity and openness
To jesuits; to buffoons my pensiveness. Donne.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice. Gov. of the Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confess, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [From ingenious.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of manly ingenuities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The antient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanville.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtile speculations. Woodward.

INGE'NUOUS. adj. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument; yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Hooker.

Infuse into their young breasts such an ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Milton on Education.

If an ingenuous detestation of falsehood be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenuous liberties. King Charles.

INGE'NUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenuous.] Openly; fairly; candidly; generously.

Ingenuously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee. Shakspeare, Timon.

It was a notable observation of a wise father, and no less ingenuously confessed, that those which held and persuaded pressure of consciences were commonly interested. Bacon.

I will ingenuously confess, that the helps were taken from divines of the church of England. Dryden

INGE'NUOUSNESS.† n. s. [from ingenuous.] Openness; fairness; candour.

There seems to have been no occasion for the equivocal word "ingenuity" to distinguish between "openness" and "dissimulation," while we have the term ingenuousness to answer the purpose distinctly. Pegge, Anecdot Eng. Lang.

I'NGENY. n. s. [ingenium, Lat.] Genius; wit. Not now in use.

Whatever of the production of his ingeny comes into foreign parts, is highly valued. Boyle.

To INGE'ST. v. a. [ingestus, Lat.] To throw into the stomach.

Nor will we affirm that iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the osteridge no alteration. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackmore.

INGE'STION. n. s. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

I'NGLE.* n. s. [probably from igniculus, dimin. of ignis, Lat. a sparkle of fire. Dr. Jamieson notices the Gael. aingeal, which has been rendered, fire.] Fire, or flame; a blaze. North. Ray, Yorkshire Glossary, and Grose. "Engle, or Ingle-wood, signifies wood for firing." Ritson, Anc. Popular Poet. Englewood, or Inglewood, is the name of a forest in Cumberland. An ingle of sticks is a common expression in Cumberland.

INGLO'RIOUS.† adj. [inglorious, Latin.]

1. Void of honour; mean; without glory.

Lest fear return them back to Egypt, choosing
Inglorious life with servitude. Milton, P. L.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king. Howell.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,
I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryden.

2. Regardless of glory; insensible to the charms of glory; unambitious.

Great Julius, whom now all the world admires,
The more he grew in years, the more inflam'd
With glory, wept that he had liv'd so long
Inglorious. Milton, P. R.

My next desire is, void of care and strife,
To lead a soft, secure, inglorious life. Dryden, Georg.

INGLO'RIOUSLY.† adv. [from inglorious.] With ignominy; with want of glory.

Herod Archelaus died ingloriously at Vienna in Austria. Loe, Blisse of Br. Beaut. (1614,) p. 53.

Pride and regret broke his heart, and so he [Boniface the eighth] there died ingloriously. More on the Seven Churches, p. 63.

This vase the chief o'ercome,
Replenish'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

Their flaming courage being ingloriously extinguished. 3 Maccab. vi. 31. Bp. Wilson's Bible.

To INGO'RGE.* See To ENGORGE.

I'NGOT.† n. s. [lingot, French; or from ingegoten, melted, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Ingot, q. d. ingoten, from in and Goth. giocta, Su. giuta, fundere. Serenius. Chaucer uses ingot, repeatedly, for a mould for casting ingots.] A mass of metal.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
For like an ass, whose back's with ingots bound,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Within the circle arms and tripods lie,
Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high. Dryden, Æn.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

To INGRA'FF. } v. a. [in and graff.]
To INGRA'FT. }

1. To propagate trees by insition.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraff, how to inoculate. May, Virgil.

2. To plant the sprig of one tree in the stock of another; as, he ingrafted an apple upon a crab.

3. To plant or introduce any thing not native.

All his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft; my merit those Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay. Milton, P. L.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.

'Tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second,
With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shakspeare, Othello.

Ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

INGRA'FTMENT. n. s. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.
2. The sprig ingrafted.

INGRA'INED.* adj. [from grain.] Dyed in grain; deeply infixed.

Ingrain'd habits, dy'd with often dips,
Are not so soon discoloured. Marston, Scourge of Vill. i. 4. (1599.)

'Tis an ingrained, rational, and judicious sorrow. Norris, Lett. on his Niece's Death.

INGRA'PPLED.* adj. [from grapple. See To ENGRAPPLE.] Seized on; twisted together.

Two lions —
With their armed paws ingrappled dreadfully. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

INGRA'TE.† } adj. [ingratus, Latin; ingrat,
INGRA'TEFUL. } French. Ingrate is proper, but ingrateful less proper than ungrateful. Dr. Johnson. — Accordingly Dr. Johnson gives but a solitary example of ingrateful, and that under the second definition. Yet no word has been more in use, by our best writers, in both senses, than ingrateful.]

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shakspeare, Coriol.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts. Shakspeare.

No man could be so impiously ingrate. Younger Brother's Apology, (1635,) p. 55.

So will fall
He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me
All he could have: I made him just and right,
Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Milton, P. L.

Is this the love, is this the recompence
Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve? Milton, P. L.

Ingrateful and treacherous guests to their best friends and entertainers. Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace.

He found that city which he had saved so ingrateful. Hakewill on Providence, p. 443.

He proved extremely false and ingrateful to me. Atterbury, vol. iv. Lett. lxviii.

Perfidious and ingrate!
His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How ingrate soever it [assa-fœtida] may seem at first, yet by use it becomes sufficiently pleasant. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

No ingrateful food. Milton, P. L.

Few would venture upon the ingrateful office of reproving. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

He was never suspected — in the least degree to dissemble his own opinions or thoughts, how ingrateful soever it often proved. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 68.

INGRA'TEFULLY.* adv. [from ingrateful.] Ungratefully; without gratitude.

Sir Robert Carew, her near kinsman, and whose family and himself she [Queen Elizabeth] had raised from the degree of a mean gentleman to high honour in title and place, most ingratefully did catch at her last breath, to carry it to the rising sun then in Scotland. Sir A. Weldon, Court of King James, p. 2.

INGRA'TEFULNESS.* n. s. [from ingrateful.] Unthankfulness. Bullokar.

To INGRA'TIATE.† v. a. [in and gratia, Lat.]

1. To put in favour; to recommend to kindness. It has with before the person whose favour is sought, Dr. Johnson says; and accordingly the examples, which he gives, are only of ingratiate with. Hammond and Scott use it also with to.

They will be fit helves for such hatchets; — to humour them, and ingratiate themselves. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 303.

They endeavour, with all manner of address, to render their company acceptable and diverting; and when they have thus ingratiated themselves, if you speak of any of our books or divines, they will with a slighting accent tell you, they are not worth their minding. The Missionaries' Arts Discovered, (1688,) p. 18.

Their managers make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spectator.

2. To recommend; to render easy: applied to things.

What difficulty would it not ingratiate to us? Hammond, Works, iv. 564.

When once we come to feel the good effects of those duties in our natures, how fast our lusts do decline, our dispositions mend, and all our graces improve in the use of them, the sense of this will mightily endear and ingratiate them to us. Scott, Christian Life, i. 4.

INGRA'TIATING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Recommendation; the act of putting in favour.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiatings with the people. King Charles.

Which had been a very great indulgence and ingratiating to women of greatest quality. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 176.

INGRA'TITUDE.† n. s. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude. It is not often used in the plural. Nor has Dr. Johnson given an example of it in that number. Shakspeare affords one.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-siz'd monster of ingratitudes.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd.
Dryden.

To INGRA'VE. v. a. [from grave.] To bury. See the fourth sense of To ENGRAVE.

Thy corps, as in the custome old,
With thy forefathers doth not lie ingrav'd.
Gamage, Epigr. (1613,) sign. C. 5.

To INGRA'VIDATE. v. a. [gravidatus, Latin.] To impregnate; to make prolifick.

They may be so pregnant and ingravidated with lustful thoughts, that they may as it were die in travail, because they cannot be delivered. Fuller, Holy State, p. 35.

To INGRE'AT. v. a. [from great.] To make great.

It appeareth, that there is, in all things, a desire to dilate and to ingreat themselves. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 174.

As some are gentle and benign, so some others, to ingreat themselves, might strain more than the strong will bear.
Abp. Abbot, Speech in Rushworth's Collect. i. 455.

INGRE'DIENT. n. s. [ingredient, French; ingrediens, Latin.]

1. Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
Milton, P. L.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton, Opticks.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison, Guardian.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a public character. Rogers.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used by Temple with into, properly, but not according to custom.

Spleen is a bad ingredient into any other distemper. Temple.

I'NGRESS. n. s. [ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance; intromission.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Those air bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INGRE'SSION. n. s. [ingression, French; ingressio, Lat.] The act of entering; entrance.

The fire would strain the pores of the glass too suddenly, and break it all in pieces to get ingression. Digby on Bodies.

I'NGUINAL. adj. [inguinal, French; inguen, Lat.] Belonging to the groin.

The plague seems to be a particular disease, characterised with eruptions in buboes, by the inflammation and suppuration of the axillary, inguinal, and other glands. Arbuthnot.

To INGU'LF.† v. a. [in and gulf. See To ENGULF.]

1. To swallow up in a vast profundity.

Southward through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill

Him who disobeys,
Me disobeys, breaks union, and that day,
Cast out from God and blessed vision, falls
Into utter darkness deep ingulf'd. Milton, P. L.

The river flows redundant;
Then rowling back, in his capacious lap
Ingulfs their whole militia, quick immerst. Philips.

2. To cast into a gulf.

If we adjoin to the lords, whether they prevail or not, we ingulf ourselves into assured danger. Hayward.

That we ingulf not ourselves too deeply in the businesses and pleasures of this life.
Bp. Hopkins, Expos. on the Lord's Prayer, &c. p. 264.

To INGU'RGITATE.† v. a. [ingurgiter, Fr. ingurgito, Latin.]

1. To swallow down.

Ingurgitating sometimes whole half glasses.
Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 112.

2. To plunge into; to engulf.

If a man do but once set his appetite upon it, [pleasure,] let let him ingurgitate himself never so deep into it, yet shall he never be able to fill his desire with it.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 206.

To INGUR'GITATE. v. n. To drink largely; to swig.

Nothing pesters the body and mind sooner, than to be still fed, to eat and ingurgitate beyond all measure, as many do.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.

INGURGITA'TION.† n. s. [from ingurgitate.] The act of intemperate swallowing.

Inconveniences alway doe happen by ingurgitations and excessive feedinges. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 191.

Too much abstinence turns vice, and too much ingurgitation is one of the seven, and at once destroys both nature and grace. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 13.

INGU'STABLE. adj. [in and gusto, Lat.] Not perceptible by the taste.

As for their taste, if the cameleon's nutriment be air, neither can the tongue be an instrument thereof; for the body of the element is ingustable, void of all sapidity, and without any action of the tongue, is, by the rough artery, or wizzen conducted into the lungs. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INHA'BILE. adj. [inhabile, French; inhabilis, Lat.] Unskilful; unready; unfit; unqualified.

INHABI'LITY.* n. s. [inhabilité, French, "disability, insufficiency, weakness, &c." Cotgrave.] Unskilfulness.

Whatever evil blind ignorance,—inhability, unwieldiness, and confusion of thoughts beget, wisdom prevents.
Barrow, Serm. i.

To INHA'BIT. v. a. [habito, Latin.] To dwell in; to hold as a dweller.

Not all are partakers of that grace, whereby Christ inhabiteth whom he saveth. Hooker.

They shall build houses and inhabit them. Isaiah, lxv. 21.

She shall be inhabited of devils. Baruch, iv. 35.

To INHA'BIT. v. n. To dwell; to live.

Learn what creatures there inhabit. Milton, P. L.

They say, wild beasts inhabit here;
But grief and wrong secure my fear. Waller.

INHA'BITABLE.† adj. [from inhabit.]

1. Capable of affording habitation.

All which live
In the inhabitable world. Donne, Poems, p. 363.

The fixed stars are all of them suns, with systems of inhabitable planets moving about them. Locke.

2. [Inhabitable, French.] Incapable of inhabitants; not habitable; uninhabitable. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Shakspeare. Formerly this was the sole explanation of the word in our old lexicography. And so Ben Jonson and others used it. The earliest use of the preceding and present sense of the word Dr. Johnson assigns to Locke; but Donne, half a century before him, so employed it.

The frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

INHA'BITANCE.† n. s. [from inhabit.] Residence of dwellers.

So the ruins yet resting in the wild moors, testify a former inhabitance. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

No promise of inhabitance; neither track of beast, nor foot of man. We have searched all this rocky desart. Beaum and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

INHA'BITANT. n. s. [from inhabit.] Dweller; one that lives or resides in a place.

In this place they report that they saw inhabitants, which were very fair and fat people. Abbot.

If the fervour of the sun were the sole cause of blackness in any land of negroes, it were also reasonable that inhabitants of the same latitude, subjected unto the same vicinity of the sun, should also partake of the same hue. Brown.

For his supposed love a third
Lays greedy hold upon a bird,
And stands amaz'd to find his dear
A wild inhabitant o' the air. Waller.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right. Pope.

INHABITA'TION. † n.s. [from inhabit.]

1. Abode; place of dwelling.

Noise call you it, or universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perish'd! Milton, S. A.

2. The act of inhabiting, or planting with dwellings; state of being inhabited.

By knowing this place we shall the better judge of the beginning of nations, and of the world's inhabitation. Ralegh.

The inhabitation of the Holy Ghost maketh a temple, as we are informed by the Apostle, "What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?" Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

3. Quantity of inhabitants.

We shall rather admire how the earth contained its inhabitation than doubt it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INHA'BITER. n. s. [from inhabit.] One that inhabits; a dweller,

Woe to the inhabiters of the earth. Rev. viii. 13.

The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabiters, of this island. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They ought to understand, that there is not only some inhabiter in this divine house, but also some ruler. Derham.

INHA'BITRESS.* n. s. [from inhabiter.] A female inhabitant.

O inhabitant of the fortress, [in the margin, inhabitress.] Jerem. x. 17.

Thou inhabitant of Saphir. [in the margin, inhabitress.] Micah, i. 11.

The church here called the inhabitress of the gardens. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655.) p. 350.

To INHA'NCE.* See To ENHANCE.

To INHA'LE. v. a. [inhalo, Latin. To draw in with air; to inspire: opposed to exhale or expire.

Martin was walking forth to inhale the fresh breeze of the evening. Arbuthnot and Pope.

But from the breezy deep the blest inhale
The fragrant murmurs of the western gale. Pope, Odyssey.

There sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling healthful the descending sun. Thomson.

INHARMO'NICAL.* adj. [in and harmonical.] Discordant. A term in musick.

INHARMO'NIOUS. adj. [in and harmonious.] Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Catullus, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmonious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thoughts, Felton.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharmonious, and shock the ear. Broome.

To INHE'RE. v. n. [inhæreo, Latin.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme, and scattering bright, can love inhere. Donne, Poems, p. 17.

They do but inhere in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependence on a subject. Digby on Bodies.

INHE'RENCE.* } n. s. [from inherent.] Existence in INHE'RENCY. } something else, so as to be inseparable from it; conjunction.

The gift of tongues, after its first infusion by the Spirit, might be in a man by habitual inherence, as a standing principle or power residing in the soul, and enabling it, upon any occasion, to express itself in several languages. South, Serm. iii. 415.

The immanency and inherency of this power in Jesus, is evident in this, that he was able to communicate it to whom he pleased. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

It is I that am pleased with beholding his gayety, and the gay man in his greatest bravery is only pleased because I am pleased with the sight; so borrowing his little and imaginary complacency from the delight that I have, not from any inherency of his own possession. Bp. Taylor, Serm. xviii.

INHE'RENT. adj. [inherent, Fr. inherens, Lat.]

1. Existing in something else; so as to be inseparable from it.

I will not do't,
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth;
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. Naturally conjoined; innate; inborn.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden, Juv.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Swift.

The ideas of such modes can no more be subsistent, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

INHE'RENTLY.* adv. [from inherent.] By inherence.

They may assert, that matter hath inherently and essentially such an internal energy. Bentley, Serm. vii.

To INHE'RIT.† v. a. [enheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shakspeare.

Why all delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain. Shakspeare.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, steril land, manured with excellent good store of fertile sherris. Shakspeare.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. St. Matt. v. 5.

The son can receive from his father good things, without empire, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it, by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakspeare. Not used.

This, or else nothing, will inherit her. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it. Titus Andronicus.

Inhe'ritable. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Hayward.

Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.

Inhe'ritably.* adv. [from inheritable.] By inheritance. Sherwood.

Inhe'ritance. n. s. [from inherit.]

1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

When the son dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Gen. xxxi. 14.

Claim our just inheritance of old. Milton, P. L.

Oh dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee
Only a sad inheritance of woe?
Gods! cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,
Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head? Smith.

2. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents' use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

3. In Shakspeare, possession.

You will rather shew our general lowts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Inhe'ritor. n. s. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a letcher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakspeare.

The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shakspeare.

Marriage, without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Inhe'ritress. n. s. [from inheritor.] An heiress; a woman that inherits.

He had given artificially some hopes to marry Anne, inheritress to the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Inhe'ritrix.† n. s. [from inheritor.] An heiress. This is now more commonly used, though inheritress be a word more analogically English. Dr. Johnson. — The word had formerly also a kind of form between both, viz. inheritrice: "Both queens of Scotland, regent and inheritrice in our dayes." Proceedings against Garnet and the late traitors, 1606, sign. E e. 4. b.

No female
Should be inheretrix in Salique land. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The foul inheritrix of the dregs of wrath. Beaumont, Psyche, ix. 5.

To Inhe'rse. v. a. [in and herse.] To enclose in a funeral monument.

See, where he lies, inhersed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms. Shakspeare.

Inhe'sion.† n. s. [inhæsio, Latin.] Inherence; the state of existing in something else.

Neither was this [the gift of prophecy and foretelling future events,] in the soul by constant inhesion and habitual abode; but, as we may not unfitly express it, only by sudden strictures, by transient immissions, and representations of the ideas of things future, to the imagination. In a word, it was in the mind not as an inhabitant, but as a guest. South, Serm. iii. 416.

And for a like reason, activity and perceptivity, by which powers alone we discover that there is a substance different from matter, and which is the necessary subject of their inhesion, must be in the mind. Baxter on the Soul, i. 328.

Inhia'tion.* n. s. [inhiatio, Latin.] A gaping after; a great desire.

An inhiation after obscene lusts. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cler. p. 24.

To INHI'BIT. v. a. [inhibeo, Lat. inhiber, French.]

1. To restrain; to hinder; to repress; to check.

Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hiccough; and vinegar put to the nostrils or gargerised, doth it also, for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The stars and planets being whirled about with great velocity, would suddenly, did nothing inhibit it, be shattered in pieces. Ray on the Creation.

Their motions also are excited and inhibited, are moderated and managed by the objects without them. Bentley, Serm. ii.

2. To prohibit; to forbid.

All men were inhibited by proclamation, at the dissolution, so much as to mention a parliament. Clarendon.

Burial may not be inhibited or denied to any one. Ayliffe.

Inhibi'tion.† n. s. [inhibition, Fr. inhibitio, Lat.]

1. Restraint; hindrance.

This ligation of senses proceeds from an inhibition of spirits, the way being stopped up by which they should come. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 24.

2. Prohibition; embargo.

He might be judged to have imposed an envious inhibition on it, because himself has not stock enough to maintain the trade. Gov. of the Tongue.

3. [In law.] Inhibition is a writ to inhibit or forbid a judge from farther proceeding in the cause depending before him. Inhibition is most commonly a writ issuing out of a higher court Christian to a lower and inferiour, upon an appeal; and prohibition out of the king's court to a court Christian, or to an inferiour temporal court. Cowel.

The decrees and inhybycyons of my lorde ordynarye of London. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 19. b.

No inhibition shall be granted out of any court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, at the instance of any party, unless it be subscribed by an advocate practising in the said court. Const. and Canons Eccl. 96.

To Inhi've. v. a. [from hive.] To put into a hive. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To Inho'ld. v. a. [in and hold.] To have inherent; to contain in itself.

It is disputed, whether this light first created be the same which the sun inholdeth and casteth forth, or whether it had continuance any longer than till the sun's creation. Ralegh.

To INHOO'P.* v. a. [in and hoop.] To confine in an enclosure.

His quails ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd at odds. Shakspeare, Ant and Cleop.

INHO'SPITABLE. adj. [in and hospitable.] Affording no kindness nor entertainment to strangers.

All places else
Inhospitable appear, and desolate;
Nor knowing us, nor known. Milton, P. L.
Since toss'd from shores to shores, from lands to lands,
Inhospitable rocks, and barren sands. Dryden, Virg.

INHO'SPITABLY. adv. [from inhospitable.] Unkindly to strangers.

Of guests he makes them slaves
Inhospitably; and kills their infant males. Milton, P. L.

INHO'SPITABLENESS.† } n. s. [in and hospitality; in-
INHOSPITA'LITY. } hospitalité, Fr.] Want of hospitality; want of courtesy to strangers.

Their inhospitality is punishment enough to itself: they have lost the honour and happiness of being host to their God. Bp. Hall, Contempl. Birth of Christ.

Those rude heaps have had the dust of his feet shaken against them for their inhospitableness. Hewyt, Serm. p. 79. (1658.)

INHU'MAN.† adj. [inhumain, Fr. inhumanus, Lat. There is now no distinction observed between inhuman and inhumane. Formerly it was inhumane, with the accent on the last syllable. See the citations from Marston and Goodman, under INHUMANLY.] Barbarous; savage; cruel; uncompassionate.

A just war may be prosecuted after a very unjust manner; by perfidious breaches of our word, by inhuman cruelties, and by assassinations. Atterbury.

The more these praises were enlarged, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent. Swift.

Princes and peers attend! while we impart
To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart. Pope, Odyssey.

INHUMA'NITY. n. s. [inhumanité, Fr. from inhuman.] Cruelty; savageness; barbarity.

Love which lover hurts is inhumanity. Sidney.

The rudeness of those who must make up their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence. King Charles.

Each social feeling fell,
And joyless inhumanity pervades,
And petrifies the heart. Thomson, Spring.

INHU'MANLY.† adv. [from inhuman.] Savagely; cruelly; barbarously.

No Jew, no Turke would use a Christian
So inhumanely as this Puritan. Marston, Sat. ii. (1598.)

O what are these
Death's ministers, not men: who thus deal death
Inhumanly to men; and multiply
Ten thousand fold the sin of him who slew
His brother! Milton, P. L.

We may assure ourselves, that whatsoever pretends to be a divine law, and can be made appear to be inhumanely rigorous, or intolerably difficult to be observed, is either no law of his, or at the least is not rightly interpreted. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii. (ed. 1720, p. 317.)

I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think myself most inhumanly treated by my countrymen. Swift.

INHUMA'TION.* n. s. [inhumation, Fr. inhumatio, Lat. from inhumo.] A burying; sepulture.

The soldiery prize that which is the proper possession of the dead, a good name and hope to be famous after their inhumation. Waterhouse, Apology for Learning, (1653,) p. 194.

It [Rolbright Stones] is probably not funereal; for some years ago its area, which is without tumulus, was examined to a considerable depth by digging, and no marks of inhumation appeared. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 61.

To INHUMATE.† } v. a. [inhumer, Fr. inhumo,
To INHU'ME. } Lat.] To bury; to inter.

We took notice of an old-conceited tomb, which inhumed a harmless shepherd. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 126.

Weeping they bear the mangled heaps of slain,

To INJE'CT.† v. a. [injectus, Lat.]

1. To throw in; to dart in.

Good thoughts are injected into us by the Holy Spirit. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 147.

Angels inject thoughts into our minds, and know our cogitations. Glanville.

2. To throw up; to cast up.

Though bold in open field, they yet surround
The town with walls, and mound inject on mound. Pope, Odyssey.

INJE'CTION.† n. s. [injection, Fr. injectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting in.

Those good injections must be received, embraced, delighted in, and followed home in a constant and habitual practice. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 147.

If we be watchful presently to abhor and reject these injections of Satan, and to cast back into his face these his fiery darts which he shoots into our souls; they are not our sins, though they are our troubles. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. on the Lord's Prayer, p. 129.

This salt powdered was, by the repeated injection of well-kindled charcoal, made to flash like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. Any medicine made to be injected by a syringe, or any other instrument, into any part of the body. Quincy.

3. The act of filling the vessels with wax, or any other proper matter, to shew their shapes and ramifications, often done by anatomists. Quincy.

INIMA'GINABLE.* adj. [inimaginable, French; Cotgrave.] Inconceivable.

In this sense two prime causes are inimaginable; and for all things to depend of one, and to be more independent beings than one, is a clear contradiction. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

INIMI'CAL.† adj. [inimicus, Latin.] Unfriendly; unkind; hurtful; hostile; adverse. A modern word; and one of the few inserted into Dr. Johnson's Dictionary after his death. I think he has somewhere used the word himself.

Associations in defence of the existing power of the sovereign, are not, in their spirit, inimical to the constitution. Brand, Ess. on Polit. Associations, (1796.)

INIMITABI'LITY. n. s. [from inimitable.] Incapacity to be imitated.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

INI'MITABLE.† adj. [inimitabilis, Lat. inimitable, Fr.] Above imitation; not to be copied. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is from Milton. Drayton, long before Milton, has employed it; and the passage evidently attracted the notice, as indeed it well deserves, of Dryden, who has used the remarkable expression of "imitate inimitable," which it presents.

[He] sitting in the silent shade,
When his fair flock to rest themselves were laid,
On his lyre tuned such harmonious lays,
That the birds perch'd upon the tender sprays,
Mad at his musick, strain themselves so much
To imitate the inimitable touch,
Breaking their hearts: that they have dropt to ground,
And died for grief, in malicing the sound. Drayton, David and Goliath.

The portal shone, inimitable on earth
By model, or by shading pencil, drawn. Milton, P. L.

What is most excellent is most inimitable. — Denham.
And imitate the inimitable force. — Dryden.
Virgil copied the ancient sculptors, in that inimitable description of military fury in the temple of Janus. — Addison on Anc. Medals.

INI'MITABLY. adv. [from inimitable.] In a manner not to be imitated; to a degree of excellence above imitation.

A man could not have been always blind who thus inimitably copies nature. — Pope, Ess. on Homer.
Thus terribly adorn'd the figures shine,
Inimitably wrought with skill divine. — Pope.
Charms such as thine, inimitably great. — Broome.

To INJO'IN. v. a. [enjoindre, Fr. injungo, Lat.]

1. To command; to enforce by authority. See To ENJOIN.

Laws do not only teach what is good, but they injoin it; they have in them a certain constraining force. — Hooker.
This garden tend, our pleasant task injoin'd. — Milton, P. L.

2. In Shakspeare, to join. Not used.

The Ottomites
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injoin'd them with a fleet. — Shakspeare.

INI'QUITOUS. adj. [inique, Fr. from iniquity.] Unjust; wicked.

INI'QUITY. n. s. [iniquitas, Lat. iniquité, Fr.]

1. Injustice; unrighteousness.

There is greater or less probability of an happy issue to a tedious war, according to the righteousness or iniquity of the cause for which it was commenced. — Smalridge.

2. Wickedness; crime.

Want of the knowledge of God is the cause of all iniquity amongst men. — Hooker.
Till God at last,
Wearied with their iniquities, withdraw
His presence from among them. — Milton, P. L.

INI'QUOUS.* adj. [iniquus, Latin.] Unjust.

Be not stoically mistaken in the equality of sins, nor commutatively iniquous in the value of transgressions; but weigh them in the scales of heaven, and by the weights of righteous reason. — Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

To INI'SLE. v. a. [from isle.] To encircle; to surround. An old word, which Dyer revived.

Inisled in his arms, he clips her for his own.
Drayton, of the Isle of Oxney and the River Rother, Pol. S. 18.
Gambia's wave inisles
An oozy coast, and pestilential ills
Diffuses wide. — Dyer.

INI'TIAL. adj. [initial, Fr. initialis, from initium, Lat.]

1. Placed at the beginning.

In the editions, which had no more than the initial letters of names, he was made by Keys to hurt the inoffensive. — Pope.

2. Incipient; not complete.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and cures many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. — Harvey.
The schools have used a middle term to express this affection, and have called it the initial fear of God. — Rogers.

INI'TIALLY.* adv. [from initial.] In an incipient degree.

Our Lord did initially and in part exercise those functions upon earth. — Barrow, vol. ii. S. 31.

To INI'TIATE.† v. a. [initier, Fr. initio, Lat.]

1. To enter; to instruct in the rudiments of an art; to place in a new state; to put into a new society.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. — More, Antid. against Atheism.
To initiate his pupil in any part of learning, an ordinary skill in the governour is enough. — Locke on Education.
He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one and twenty. — Spectator.
No sooner was a convert initiated, but, by an easy figure, he became a new man. — Addison.

2. To begin upon.

Many secret designs only initiated then, and not executed till long after. — Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 554.

To INI'TIATE. v. n. To do the first part; to perform the first rite.

The king himself initiates to the pow'r,
Scatters with quiv'ring hand the sacred flour,
And the stream sprinkles. — Pope, Odyss.

INI'TIATE.† adj. [initié, Fr. initiatus, Lat.]

1. Unpractised.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use: —
We are yet but young indeed. — Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Newly admitted; fresh, like a novice.

To rise in science, as in bliss,
Initiate in the secrets of the skies! — Young, Night Th. 6.

INITIA'TION.† n. s. [initiatio, Lat. from initiate. Initiation was reckoned a new and uncouth word, in 1656, according to Heylin.] The reception, admission, or entrance of a new comer into any art or state.

The ground of initiating or entering men into Christian life, is more summarily comprised in the form of baptism, the ceremony of this initiation instituted by Christ. — Hammond.
Silence is the first thing that is taught us at our initiation into sacred mysteries. — Broome, Notes to the Odyssey.

INI'TIATORY.* adj. [from initiate.] Introductory.

He hath gotten to himself some insight in things ordinarily incident, and controverted, by experience, by reading some initiatory treatises in the law.
Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 23.
It being the initiatory rite of their religion.
Young on Idolatr. Corrupt. i. 46.

INI'TIATORY.* n. s. [from initiate.] Introductory rite.

INJUDI'CIAL. adj. [in and judicial.] Not according to form of law. — Dict.

INJUDI'CIOUS. adj. [in and judicious.] Void of judgement; without judgement. Used both of persons and things.

A philosopher would either think me in jest, or very injudicious, if I took the earth for a body regular in itself, if compared with the rest of the universe. — Burnet.
A sharp wit may find something in the wisest man, whereby to expose him to the contempt of injudicious people. — Tillotson.

INJUDI'CIOUSLY. adv. [from injudicious.] With ill judgement; not wisely.

Scaliger injudiciously condemns this description. — Broome.

INJUDI'CIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from injudicious.] Want of judgement.

In the sisterhood of fancy, Musick may justly challenge a birthright, she and Painting being but younger sisters to Poetry; a ternary of sisters, whether rich, or poor, that stoop not to inferiour souls, whose dulness deafs their delight in this second, and injudiciousness blinds their wonder or liking of the third. — Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 480.

INJU'NCTION. n. s. [from injoin; injunctus, injunctio, Latin.]

1. Command; order; precept.

The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hooker.

My duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;
Though the injunction be to bar my doors,
And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you. Shakspeare.

For, still they knew; and ought to have still remember'd
The high injunction, not to taste that fruit,
Whoever tempted. Milton, P. L.

The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injunctions of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency. South.

2. [In law.] Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding. Cowel.

To I'NJURE. v. a. [injurier, Fr. injuria, Lat.]

1. To hurt unjustly; to mischief undeservedly; to wrong.

They injure by chance in a crowd, and without a design; then hate always whom they have once injured. Temple.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

2. To annoy; to affect with any inconvenience.

Lest heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbesought provided. Milton, P. L.

I'NJURER. n. s. [from injure.] He that hurts another unjustly; one who wrongs another.

Ill deeds are well turn'd back upon their authors;
And 'gainst an injurer, the revenge is just. B. Jonson.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or the sufferer. Atterbury.

INJU'RIOUS. adj. [from injury; injurius, Lat. injurieux, Fr.]

1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.

Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryden.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,
After offence returning, to regain
Love once possest. Milton, S. A.

3. Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our faults, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding. Tillotson.

4. Detractory; contumelious; reproachful; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be. Sidney.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image; which how injurious, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God? South.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition? Swift.

INJU'RIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.] Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice, with contumely.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked. Pope and Gay.

INJU'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from injurious.] Quality of being injurious.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state, than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression. King Charles.

I'NJURY. n. s. [injuria, Lat. injure, Fr.]

1. Hurt without justice.

The places were acquired by just title of victory, and therefore in keeping of them no injury was offered. Hayward.

Riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
And injury and outrage. Milton, P. L.

2. Mischief; detriment.

Many times we do injury to a cause, by dwelling upon trifling arguments. Watts, Logick.

3. Annoyance.

Great injuries mice and rats do in the fields. Mortimer.

4. Contumelious language; reproachful appellation. A French mode of speech. Not now in use.

Casting off the respects fit to be continued between great kings, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king; and spake all the injuries he could devise of Charles. Bacon.

INJU'STICE. n. s. [injustice, Fr. injustitia, Lat.] Iniquity; wrong.

Cunning men can be guilty of a thousand injustices without being discovered, or at least without being punished. Swift.

INK. n. s. [encre, Fr. inchiostro, Italian.]

1. The black liquor with which men write.

Mourn boldly my ink; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine. Sidney.

O! she's fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again. Shakspeare.

Like madmen they hurl'd stones and ink. B. Jonson.

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,
In ink the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the sable wave. Waller.

Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown.

I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.

The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Howell, Voc. For.

He that would live clear of envy must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Estrange.

I could hardly restrain them from throwing the ink bottle at one another's heads. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. Ink is used for any liquor with which they write: as, red ink; green ink.

To INK. v. a. [from the noun.] To black or daub with ink: as, his face is all over inked.

I'NKHORN.† n. s. [ink and horn, Dr. Johnson; who also, in his definition of the word, says that it is a case commonly made of horn. But "words ending in erne, eron, are derived from the Saxon ерn, eарn, a secret place to put any thing in. Hence comes ink-ern, i. e. a little vessel into which we put ink, for which we corruptly write ink-horn, as bishop Gibson has very justly remarked." Greenwood, Eng. Gr. 2d edit. 1722, p. 212.] A portable case for the instruments of writing.

Bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail; we are now to examine those men. Shakspeare.

One man among them was clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side. Ezek. ix. 2.

What is more frequent than to say a silver inkhorn? Grew.

I'NKHORN.* adj. A reproachful epithet of elder times, meaning affected, pedantick, or pompous. Bishop Hall adopted inkhornisms to denote expressions of such a character.

Such are your ynkehorne termes.
Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 59. b.

I would wish that such usual words as we English be acquainted with might still remain in their form and sound, so far forth as the Hebrew will bear; inkhorn terms to be avoided.
Bp. Cox, to Abp. Parker, Strype's Parker, p. 208.

Ere that we will suffer such a prince,—
To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

I'NKINESS.* n. s. [from inky.] Blackness. Sherwood.

I'NKLE. n. s. A kind of narrow fillet; a tape.

Inkles, caddisses, cambricks, lawns: why he songs them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakspeare.

I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee:
He wist not when the hempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly doff of inkle blue. Gay, Past.

I'NKLING.† n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from inklincken, Teut. to sound within. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, I heard not an inkling. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius derives it from the Icel. inna, intimè impendere; but, as the Su. Goth. wink is synon. Dr. Jamieson says, it is perhaps rather from winka, to beckon.]

1. Hint; whisper; intimation.

He had a lytle ynklinge, that it was a speciall friend of his that kylled the deer. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardner, p. 198.

Our business is not unknown to the senate: they have had inkling what we intend to do, which now we'll shew them in deeds. Shakspeare, Coriol.

We in Europe, notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age, never heard of any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. Bacon, New Atlantis.

They had some inkling of secret messages between the marquis of Newcastle and young Hotham. Clarendon.

Aboard a Corinthian vessel he got an inkling among the ship's crew of a conspiracy. L'Estrange.

Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of watery Neptune, is bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds. Shakspeare.

2. Resembling ink.

The liquor presently began to grow pretty clear and transparent, losing its inky blackness. Boyle on Colours.

3. Black as ink.

'Tis not alone my inky cloak good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To INLA'CE.* v. a. [from lace.] To embellish with variegations. See To LACE.

Ropes of pearl her neck and breast inlace.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. vii. 10.

I'NLAND.† adj. [in and land.]

1. Interiour; lying remote from the sea.

In this wide inland sea, that hight by name,
The idle lake, my wandering ship I row. Spenser, F. Q.

Goodly laws, like little inland seas, will carry even ships upon their waters. Spenser on Ireland.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by, and then his state
Empties itself as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

This person did publish a pamphlet printed in England for a general excise or inland duty. Swift.

2. Civilised. Opposed to rustick, or upland, the old expression for rustick. Not now in use.

Orl. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many: but, indeed, an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man, Shakspeare, As you like it.

I'NLAND.† n. s. [Milton has placed the accent on the last syllable of this word.] Interiour or midland parts.

Out of these small beginnings, gotten near to the mountains, did they spread themselves into the inland. Spenser.

They of those marches shall defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shakspeare.

The maritime parts of countries were inhabited before the inlands that lie farthest from the sea.
Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

To INLO'CK.* v. a. [from lock.] To close; to lock, set, or shut one thing within another. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To INLU'MINE.* See To ENLUMINE.

I'NLY. adj. [from in.] Interiour; internal; secret.

Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakspeare.

I'NLY.† adv. [inlice, Saxon.] Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker eld. Spenser, F. Q.

I've inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton, P. L.

These growing thoughts my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoiced. Milton, P. R.

The soldiers shout around with generous rage;
He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see
His host. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

I'NMATE.† n. s. [in and mate.]

Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Cowel.

All other thoughts being inmates. Donne, Poems, p. 18.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve

I'NMATE.* adj. Admitted as an inmate.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests
Too numerous. Milton, P. L.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

I'NMOST.† adj. [from in and most. Sax. innemeꞅt.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.

'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakspeare.

Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison on Italy.

Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their inmost hollow caves resound. Pope.

I got into the inmost court. Swift, Gull. Travels.

INN.† n. s. [inn, inne, Saxon, a chamber, and also in the present sense an inn: inni, Goth. an abode, a sojourning place. "Inn enim veteribus hospitium publicum, cauponam, significabat." Keysler, Antiq. Septentrion. p. 350. Yet, originally, inn meant merely a house or habitation; and not a place of publick entertainment; to which latter meaning our old lexicography has well affixed the description of "a house of common ingoing."]

1. A chamber; a lodging; a house; a dwelling.

Get us fast into this inn
A kneding trough or elles a kemelyn. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

Phœbus with his fiery waine
Unto his inne began to draw apace. Spenser, F. Q.

As they [the palm-tree and phenix] sympathize much, the phenix will lightly take up his inne no where els. Partheneia Sacra, (1633,) p. 151.

2. A house of entertainment for travellers.

How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney.

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best. Spenser, F. Q.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn. Spenser, F. Q.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Like pilgrims to the appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Locke.

3. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

To INN.† v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.

When he had brought hem into his citee,
And inned hem, everich at his degree,
He feasteth hem. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

A firie beam
And pleasing heat, such as in first of spring
From Sol, inn'd in the Bull, do kindly stream. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. vi. 15.

INNA'TE.† }
INNA'TED. } adj. [inné, Fr. innatus, Lat.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superadded; not adscititious. Innated is not proper, Dr. Johnson observes, citing a passage from Howell; who indeed repeatedly uses it, in his Letters and in his Instructions for Foreign Travel. It is used also by the author of Partheneia Sacra, p. 156. 1633. The word innating also, for ingenerating or producing, was once in use; and in a passage of such forcible description, as induces me to give it; though the word will hardly be adopted.

Studious contemplation sucks the juice
From wisards' cheeks, who making curious search

For nature's secrets, the First Innating Cause
Laughs them to scorn, as man doth busy apes
When they will zany men. Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

Innate idleness, — and great wealth, and little wit, go commonly together. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The Druinian hath been cried up for an innated integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Howell.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd. Dryden.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter. Bentley.

INNA'TELY.* adv. [from innate.] Naturally.

INNA'TENESS. n. s. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNA'VIGABLE.† adj. [innavigable, French: Cotgrave: by whom also the English word is used, as it is by Cockeram and Bullokar; innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed by sailing.

If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden, Æn.

I'NNER.† adj. [from in. Saxon innop. Formerly the superlative innerest, from this word, for inmost, was used. " Thilke circle that is innerest or most within." Chaucer, Boeth. iv. pros. 6.] Interiour; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought. Spenser, F. Q.

This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton, P. R.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison, Spect.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.

I'NNERLY.* adv. [from inner.] More within. Not in use. Barret.

I'NNERMOST.† adj. [from inner. It seems less proper than inmost.]

The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly. Prov. xviii. 8.

2. Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNHO'LDER.† n. s. [inn and hold.]

1. An inhabitant. See the primary sense of INN.

I doe possesse the world's most regiment,
As, if ye please it into parts divide,
And every part's innholders to convent,
Shall to your eyes appear incontinent. Spenser, F. Q.

2. A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

You shall enquire whether bakers and brewers keep their assize, and whether as well they as butchers, inn-holders, and victuallers, do sell that which is wholesome. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 19.

I'NNING.† n. s. [innung, Sax.]

1. Ingathering of corn. Sherwood.

A good supper must be provided, and every one that did any thing towards the inning must now have some reward. Tusser, Redivivus, (1744,) p. 104.

2. In the plural, lands recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.

3. A term in the game of cricket; the turn for using the bat.

For why, my inning's at an end;
The earl has caught my ball. Duncombe.

INNKE'EPER. n. s. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innkeeper. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

A factious innkeeper was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison, Freeholder.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions. Addison.

I'NNOCENCE. }
I'NNOCENCY. } n. s. [innocence, Fr. innocentia, Lat.]

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton, P. L.

What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a conscience of its own innocence and integrity. Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'st part black. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. Harmlessness; innoxiousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burnet, Theory.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shakspeare.

We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

I'NNOCENT.† adj. [innocent, Fr. innocens, Lat.]

1. Pure from mischief.

Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T' appease an angry god. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. St. Matt. xxvii. 4.

To wreak on innocent frail man his loss. Milton, P. L.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I am innocent of the blood of this just person. St. Matt. xxvii. 24.

The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.

3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.

The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

To fetchen water at a well is went. Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

I'NNOCENT.† n. s.

1. One free from guilt or harm.

This ladie herde all that he saide,
Howe he swore, and howe he praide,
Whiche was an enchantment
To hir, that was an innocent. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

But antique Age, yet in the infancie
Of time, did live then, like an innocent,
In simple truth and blameless chastitie. Spenser, F. Q.

Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakspeare, Othello.

If murthering innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Pilate's heart tells him, he hath done too much already in sentencing an innocent to death. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

2. A natural; an idiot.

Innocents are excluded by natural defects. Hooker.

I ask'd her questions, and she answer'd me

So far from what she was, so childishly,
So sillily, as if she were a fool,
An innocent. Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

See one man vilify and insult over his brother, as if he were an innocent or a block. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 437.

I'NNOCENTLY. adv. [from innocent.]

1. Without guilt.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly. South.

2. With simplicity; with silliness or imprudence.

3. Without hurt.

Balls at his feet lay innocently dead. Cowley.

INNO'CUOUS.† adj. [innocuus, Lat.]

1. Harmless in effects.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 22.

Speculative misapprehensions may be innocuous, but immorality pernicious. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 17.

The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

2. Doing no harm.

A generous lion will not hurt a beast that lies prostrate, nor an elephant an innocuous creature. Burton, Anat of Mel. p. 358.

A patient, innocuous, innocent man.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 437.

INNO'CUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuous.] Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INNO'CUOUSNESS. n. s. [from innocuous.] Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby on Bodies.

INNO'MINABLE.* adj. [innominabilis, Lat.] Not to be named. Cockeram.

Foule things innominable. Chaucer, Test. of Love, B. 1.

INNO'MINATE.* adj. [innominé, Fr. in and nominate.] Without a name; not named.

Places formerly innominate. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 379.

To I'NNOVATE.† v. a. [innover, Fr. innovo, Lat.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniencies. Bacon.

Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act till then unknown. Dryden.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.

2. To change by introducing novelties.

The most frequent maladies are such as proceed from themselves; as first, when religion and God's service is neglected, innovated, or altered. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

To introduce that for reformation which cannot appear to be restored, but may seem to be innovated.
Thorndike, Of Forbearance, &c. p. 16.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South.

To I'NNOVATE.* v. n. To introduce novelties.

Time—innovateth greatly, but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived. Bacon, Ess. of Innovations.

It is a matter of great concernment towards the edification of the church, to obey our superiours, not to innovate in publick forms of worship. Bp. Taylor on Extempore Prayer, § 27.

INNOVA'TION. n. s. [innovation, Fr. from innovate.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue stayedness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker.

It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees scarce to be perceived. Bacon, Essays.

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.

I'NNOVATOR. n. s. [innovateur, Fr. from innovate.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traiterous innovator,
A foe to th' public weal, Shakspeare, Coriol.

He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? Bacon, Essays.

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship. South.

INNO'XIOUS.† adj. [innoxius, Lat.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads and horse's manes. Digby.

We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innoxious qualities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane,
The meteor sits. Thomson, Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes; harmless; doing no harm.

Another sort of these [spirits] there are, which frequent forlorn houses; which the Italians call foliots, most part innoxious. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age. Pope.

INNO'XIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.

2. Without harm suffered.

Animals that can innoxiously digest these poisons become antidotal to the poison digested. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INNO'XIOUSNESS. n. s. [from innoxious.] Harmlessness.

INNUE'NDO. n. s. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned. L'Estrange.

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryden.

Pursue your trade of scandal picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendo's, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows. Swift.

I'NNUENT.* adj. [innuens, Lat. from innuo.] Significant.

He may apply his mind to heraldry, antiquity, innuent impresses, emblems. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 282.

INNUMERABI'LITY.* n. s. [from innumerable; Fr. innumerabilité.] State or quality of being innumerable.

He rejecteth this innumerability of causes.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 217.

INNU'MERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me, where I may never see them more. Milton, P. L.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts. Locke.

INNU'MERABLENESS.* n. s. [from innumerable.] Innumerability. Sherwood.

INNU'MERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNU'MEROUS.† adj. [innumerus, Lat.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumerous boughs. Milton, Comus.
Innumerous mischiefs then to mischiefs adds.
More, Song of the Soul, iii. iv. 32.

Keep back those innumerous concupiscences, and corrupt imaginations violently succeeding each other.
Spiritual Conflict, P. ii. p. 58. (1651.)

I take the wood,
And, in thick shelter of innumerous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. Pope, Odyss.

INOBE'DIENCE.* n. s. [inobedience, French; inobedientia, Lat.] Disobedience.

Inobedience to this call of Christ.
Bp Bedell, Serm. (1634.) p. 81.

INOBE'DIENT.* adj. [inobedient, Fr. inobediens, Lat.] Disobedient. Formerly used as a substantive. "Examples howe mortall synne maketh the synners inobedyentes to have many paynes and doloures within the fyre of hell." 12mo bl. l. without date.

INOBSE'RVABLE.* adj. [inobservabilis, Lat.] Unobservable. Bullokar, and Cockeram.

INOBSE'RVANCE.* n. s. [inobservantia, Lat.] Want of observance; disobedience; heedlessness; negligence; disregard.

The breach and inobservance of certain wholesome and politick laws. Bacon, Charge, &c. p. 16.

A dull and stupid inobservance of such examples of divine justice — stands often arraigned in Scripture as a very great sin. Spencer on Prod. p. 376.

Sluggishness, and inobservances of God's seasons and opportunities. Hammond, Works, iv. 574.

Infidelity doth commonly proceed from negligence, or drowsy inobservance and carelessness. Barrow on the Creed.

INOBSERVA'TION.* n. s. [inobservatus, Lat. in and observation.] Want of observation.

These writers are in all this guilty of the most shameful inobservation. Shuckford on the Creation, p. 118.

To INO'CULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant, by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to engraff, how to inoculate. May, Virg.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

To INO'CULATE.† v. a.

1. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Oh, for that Palatine vine, late inoculated with a precious bud of our royal stem! Bp. Hall, Serm. Works, ii. 268.

'The end of love is to have two made one
In will, and in affection, that the minds
Be first inoculated, not the bodies. B. Jonson, New Inn.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants to inoculate. Cleaveland.

2. To infect with the small pox by inoculation. See the second sense of INOCULATION.

The child once burnt dreads the fire; he runs away from the surgeon by whom he was inoculated. Reid.

INOCULA'TION.† n. s. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculate.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone-fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. Chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make a horizontal cut across the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards, about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping, are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock; tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. Miller.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Howell.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbuthnot.

INO'CULATOR. n. s. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Freind, Hist. of Physick.

To INO'DIATE.* v. a. [in and odious.] To make hateful. This word perhaps is peculiar to South.

He inflicts them [calamities] — partly to give the world fresh demonstrations of his hatred of sin, and partly to inodiate and imbitter sin to the chastised sinner. South, Serm. vi. 224.

The ancienter members of her communion, who have all along owned and contended for a strict conformity to her rules and sanctions, as the surest course to establish her, have been of late represented, or rather reprobated, under the inodiating character of high churchmen.
South, Dedication to Archbishop Marsh.

INO'DORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

INO'DOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Lat.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, insipid, inodorous liquor. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INOFFE'NSIVE.† adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors. Rogers.

2. Giving no uneasiness; causing no terrour.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, till it be grown inoffensive to them. Locke.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

The dervis, and other santoons or enthusiasticks, being in the crond, express their zeal by turning round so long together, and with such swiftness, as will hardly be credited, which by custom is made inoffensive. Sir T. Herbert. Trav. p. 326.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive must. Milton, P. L.

With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite. Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation. Philips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell. Milton, P. L.

So have I seen a river gently glide,
In a smooth course, and inoffensive tide;
But if with dams its current we restrain,
It bears down all, and foams along the plain. Addison, Ovid.

INOFFE'NSIVELY.† adv. [from inoffensive.] Without appearance of harm; without harm.

Though were she [Poetry] a more unworthy mistress, I think she might be inoffensively served with the broken messes of our twelve o'clock hours, which homely service she only claimed and found of me, for that short while of my attendance. Bp. Hall, Postscript to his Satires.

He had many that lived inoffensively under his empire and government. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 263.

To live lovingly, quietly, inoffensively. Milton, Tetrachordon.

He would not spare to give seasonable reproof, and wholesome advice when he saw occasion. I never knew any that would do it so freely, and that knew how to manage that freedom of speech so inoffensively. Bp. Lloyd, Serm. p. 30.

The Israelites had hitherto lived inoffensively among them. Patrick on Gen. xxxiv. 21.

This vulgar tar — appears to be an excellent balsam, containing the virtues of most other balsams, which it easily imparts to water, and by that means readily and inoffensively insinuates them into the habit of the body. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 10.

INOFFE'NSIVENESS.† n. s. [from inoffensive.] Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

What is the ground of this their pretended inoffensiveness? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 139.

INOFFI'CIOUS.† adj. [inofficiosus, Latin.]

1. Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others. This is Dr. Johnson's definition of the word, without an example; against which Mr. Mason has protested, insisting that the word will not bear such an interpretation, but that it is a Latinism, as in the following passage from Ben Jonson, having the sense of "unfit for any office." But he has heedlessly blamed the great lexicographer; and the Latin inofficiosus is unkind, undutiful; and such is the meaning in the verses that follow. The river is upbraided for being wanting in dutiful or civil attention.

Up, thou tame river, wake:
And from thy liquid limbs this slumber shake:
Thou drown'st thyself in inofficious sleep.
B. Jonson, Part of the King's Entertainment.

2. Applied by civilians to that will, in which they are omitted, or but slightly provided for, who ought chiefly to be considered. Bullokar.

INOPERA'TION.* n. s. [from operation.] Production of effects: agency; influence.

Here is not a cold and feeble prevention, but an effectual inoperation, yea, a powerful creation. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 74.

A true temper of a quiet and peaceable estate of the soul upon good grounds can never be attained without the inoperation of that Holy Spirit, from whom every good gift, and every perfect giving, proceedeth. Bp. Hall, of Contentation, § 25.

INO'PINATE. adj. [inopinatus. Lat. inopiné, Fr.] Not expected.

INOPPORTU'NE. adj. [inopportunus, Lat.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INOPPORTU'NELY.* adv. [from inopportune.] Unseasonably; inconveniently.

That holy exercise may not be done inopportunely. Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 269.

You have taken me, said he, rather inopportunely to-day. Dialogues on the Amusements of Clergymen, p. 208.

INO'RDINACY.† n. s. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

Inordinacy and immorality of mind. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 145.

O powerful God, on those of us who are yet unregenerate, bestow thy restraining grace, which may curb and stop our natural inordinacy! Hammond, Works, iv. 683.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation. Gov. of the Tongue.

INO'RDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Lat.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people were wisely brought to allegiance; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught. Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise
At least distempered, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits, ingendering pride. Milton, P. L.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

INO'RDINATELY.† adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

Which constrayned him forcibly
For to love a certaine body,
Above all other inordinately. Skelton, Poems, p. 161.

Neither the study of philosophy, neither remembraunce of his deare friend, — could withdraw him from that unkinde appetite, but that of force he must love inordinately that lady whom his said friend had determined to marye. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 123. b.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Bp. Taylor.

INO'RDINATENESS.† n. s. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

Out of pusillanimity or inordinateness a man prostitutes himself to those unworthy conditions and actions of sinful pleasure, that misbeseem a man, a Christian. Bp. Hall, Fall of Pride.

They are pursued with inordinateness. Feltham, Res. i. 9.

Those good things which we abuse to sin by the inordinateness of our minds. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 36.

INORDINA'TION.† n. s. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

This is inordination of zeal. Bp. Taylor, Serm. p. 185.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lie from that intrinsick inordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lie was absolutely and universally sinful. South.

INORGA'NICAL.† adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

Whether it be organical or inorganical. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 26.

Many of these mushroom sects are like those inorganical creatures bred upon the banks of Nilus, which perished quickly, after they were bred, for want of fit organs. Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 354.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganical parts of matter. Locke.

To INO'SCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Lat.] To unite by opposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched by inosculating with nerves. Derham, Physico-Theol.

To INO'SCULATE.* v. a. To insert; to join in or among.

It is an opinion, received by many, that the sap circulates in plants as the blood in animals; that it ascends through capillary arteries in the trunk, into which are inosculated other vessels of the bark answering to veins. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 34.

INOSCULA'TION.† n. s. [from inosculate.] Union by conjunction of the extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Ray.

The grand junction is an inosculation of the grand trunk. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

I'NQUEST. n. s. [enqueste, Fr. inquisitio, Lat.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in? Atterbury.

2. [In law.] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict so judgement passes: for the judge saith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. Cowel.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South.

To INQUI'ET.* v. a. [old Fr. inquieter.] To disquiet; to trouble; to disturb.

Conscience confounded the reason, it croketh the will, and enquyeteth the soule. Bp. Fisher, Ps. 11, 12.

INQUIETA'TION.* n. s. [from To inquiet.] Disturbance; annoyance. Obsolete.

To INSCRI'BE. v. a. [inscribo, Latin; inscrire, French.]

1. To write on any thing. It is generally applied to something written on a monument, or on the outside of something. It is therefore more frequently used with on than in.

In all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, ego & rex meus
Was still inscrib'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Connatural principles are in themselves highly reasonable, and deducible by a strong process of ratiocination to be most true; and consequently the high exercise of ratiocination might evince their truth, though there were no such originally inscribed in the mind. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Ye weeping loves! the stream with myrtles hide,
And with your golden darts, now useless grown,
Inscribe a verse on this relenting stone. Pope.

2. To mark any thing with writing; as, I inscribed the stone with my name.

3. To assign to a patron without a formal dedication.

One ode, which pleased me in the reading, I have attempted to translate in Pindarick verse: 'tis that which is inscribed to the present earl of Rochester. Dryden.

4. To draw a figure within another.

In the circle inscribe a square. Notes to Creech's Manilius.

INSCRI'BER.* n. s. [from To inscribe.] One who inscribes.

I should then hope to be taught from such learning and knowledge what all those elementary characters, and lineal diagrams, mean to express, which Kircher has passed by unnoticed, as though making no part of the inscriber's intention. Pownall on Antiq. p. 48.

INSCRI'PTION. n. s. [inscription, Fr. inscriptio, Lat.]

1. Something written or engraved.

This avarice of praise in time to come,
Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

2. Title.

Joubertus by the same title led our expectation, whereby we reaped no advantage, it answering scarce at all the promise of the inscription. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. [In law.] An obligation made in writing, whereby the accuser binds himself to undergo the same punishment, if he shall not prove the crime which he objects to the party accused, in his accusatory libel, as the defendant himself ought to suffer, if the same be proved. Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. Consignment of a book to a patron without a formal dedication.

INSCRI'PTIVE.* adj. [inscriptus, Lat.] Bearing inscription.

Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abbey.
Pursuits of Literature.

Your answer had not been inscroll'd.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

INSCRUTABI'LITY.* n. s. [from inscrutable.] Incapability of being discovered, or traced out.

His theological conceptions were always, I confess, to me, who yet affect some insight into the human character, one of the inscrutabilities of mystery. Wakefield, Mem. p. 130.

INSCRU'TABLE. adj. [inscrutabilis, Lat. inscrutable, Fr.] Unsearchable; not to be traced out by inquiry or study.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a weather-cock on a steeple. Shakspeare.

This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good, and was wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy. Bacon.

O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power. Sandys.

Hereunto they have recourse as unto the oracle of life, the great determinator of virginity, conception, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown.

We should contemplate reverently the works of nature and grace, the inscrutable ways of Providence, and all the wonderful methods of God's dealing with men. Atterbury.

INSCRU'TABLY.* adv. [from inscrutable.] So as not to be traced out.

To INSCU'LP.† v. a. [insculpo, Lat.] To engrave; to cut. Shakspeare uses it in the sense of to carve in relief, Mr. Douce observes; and might have caught the word from the casket story in the Gesta Romanorum, where it is rightly used.

The third vessel was made of lead, and thereupon was insculpt this poesy. Transl. of Gest. Rom.

A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold; but that's insculp'd upon.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

INSCU'LPTION.* n. s. [insculptus, Lat.] Inscription. Not in use.

What is it to have
A flattering, false insculption on a tomb,
And in men's hearts reproach? Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy.

INSCU'LPTURE. n. s. [from in and sculpture.] Any thing engraved.

Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' th' sea;
And on the grave-stone this insculpture, which
With wax I brought away. Shakspeare, Timon.

It was usual to wear rings on either hand; but when precious gems and rich insculptures were added, the custom of wearing them was translated unto the left. Brown.

To INSE'AM. v. a. [in and seam.] To impress or mark by a seam or cicatrix.

Deep o'er his knee inseam'd remain'd the scar. Pope.

To INSE'ARCH.* v. n. [from search.] To make inquiry. Huloet.

Now let us insearch, what friendship or amitie is.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 118. b.

I'NSECT. n. s. [insecta, Lat.]

1. Insects may be considered together as one great tribe of animals: they are called insects from a separation in the middle of their bodies, whereby they are cut into two parts, which are joined together by a small ligature, as we see in wasps and common flies. Locke.

Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none. Milton, P. L.

2. Any thing small or contemptible.

In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings, and awful fathers of mankind;
And some with whom compar'd, your insect tribes
Are but the beings of a summer's day. Thomson.

INSECTA'TOR. n. s. [from insector, Lat.] One that persecutes or harasses with pursuit. Dict.

I'NSECTED.* adj. [from insect; Lat. insectus, cut. See Locke's explanation of insect.] Having the nature of an insect.

We can hardly endure the sting of that small insected animal, [the bee.] Howell, Lett. ii. 6.

INSE'CTILE. adj. [from insect.] Having the nature of insects.

Insectile animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs.
Bacon.

INSE'CTILE.* n. s. An insect.

Entire insectiles of any greatness, and in any posture, [may] be inclosed therein.
Wotton to Sir E. Bacon, (1633,) Rem. p. 465.

The ant, and silkworm, and many such insectiles.
Smith on Old Age, p. 264.

INSECTO'LOGER. n. s. [insect and λόγος.] One who studies or describes insects. A word, I believe, unauthorised.

The insect itself is, according to modern insectologers, of the ichneumon-fly kind. Derham, Physico-Theol.

INSECU'RE.† adj. [in and secure.]

1. Not secure; not confident of safety.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself. Tillotson.

2. Not safe.

Am I going to build on precarious and insecure foundations?
Hurd.

INSECU'RELY.* adv. [from insecure.] Without certainty.

When I say secured, I mean it in the sense, in which the word should always be understood at courts, that is insecurely.
Ld. Chesterfield.

INSECU'RITY. n. s. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of confidence.

It may be easily perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown.

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate insecurity of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition and contrition, sorrow, and resolution of amendment. Hammond.

INSECU'TION. n. s. [insecution, Fr. insecutio, Lat.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel
Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel,
With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman, Iliad.

To INSE'MINATE.* v. a. [insemino, Latin.] To sow. Cockeram.

INSEMINA'TION. n. s. [insemination, Fr. insemino. Lat.] The act of scattering seed on ground.

INSE'NSATE. adj. [insensé, French; insensato, Italian.] Stupid; wanting thought; wanting sensibility.

Ye be reprobates; obdurate, insensate creatures. Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,
As their own ruin on themselves t'invite,
Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,
And with blindness internal struck. Milton, S. A.

INSENSIBI'LITY. n. s. [insensibilité, French, from insensible.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next acquires. Glanville.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.

INSE'NSIBLE.† adj. [insensible, French.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is that word honour? air: a trim reckoning. Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yea, to the dead: but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shakspeare.

Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton, Opt.

2. Slowly gradual, so as that no progress is perceived.

They fall away,
And languish with insensible decay. Dryden.

3. Void of feeling either mental or corporal.

I thought
I then was passing to my former state
Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve. Milton, P. L.

Accept an obligation without being a slave to the giver, or insensible of his kindness. Wotton, Rom. Hist.

4. Void of emotion or affection. With of and to; which may apply also to the preceding sense.

You grow insensible to the conveniency of riches, the delights of honour and praise. Temple.

You render mankind insensible to their beauties, and have destroyed the empire of love. Dryden.

Old men are not so insensible of beauty, as, it may be, you young ladies think. Dryden, Lett. (ed. Malone,) p. 73.

5. Void of sense or meaning.

If it make the indictment insensible or uncertain, it shall be quashed. Hale, H. P. C. P. ii. ch. 24.

INSE'NSIBLENESS.† n. s. [from insensible.] Absence of perception; inability to perceive.

Thou, that art the great physician in heaven, first cure our insensibleness. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 51.

Such mollifying considerations may serve to allay any swellings and risings, which an insensibleness of our present hopes may possibly occasion. Spencer, Righteous Ruler, (Camb. 1660,) p. 40.

The insensibleness of the pain proceeds rather from the relaxation of the nerves than their obstruction. Ray.

INSE'NSIBLY. adv. [from insensible.]

1. Imperceptibly; in such a manner as is not discovered by the senses.

The planet earth, so stedfast though she seem,

The steady tyrant man,
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chace. Thomson.

The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power. Broome.

To I'nsolence. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and assaulted. King Charles.

I'nsolent.† adj. [insolent, Fr. insolens, Lat.]

1. Unaccustomed. This is the primary sense of the word, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson and our other lexicographers.

If one chance to derive anie word from the Latine, which is insolent to their ears, — they forthwith make a jest at it. Pettie, Introd. to Guazzo's Civil Conversation, (1586.)

2. Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters. Atterbury.

I'nsolently.† adv. [insolenter, Lat.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

She, — by a king and conqueror made so great,
Into her own self-praise most insolently brake. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

Not unlearnedly mad, or insolently wedded unto their own wills. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 8.

What I must disprove,
He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.

Not faction, when it shook thy regal seat,
Not senates, insolently loud,
Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.

Briant, naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, more like a criminal than a prisoner of war. Addison.

Inso'lvable.† adj. [insolvable, Fr. in and solve.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Inso'lvency.† n. s. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts. An act of insolvency is a law by which imprisoned debtors are released without payment.

Even the dear delight
Of sculpture, paint, intaglios, books, and coins,
Thy breast, sagacious prudence! shall connect
With filth and beggary, nor disdain to link
With black insolvency. Shenstone, Economy, P. ii.

Inso'lvent. adj. [in and solvo, Lat.] Unable to pay.

By publick declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Howell.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life. Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watts.

Insolvent tenant of incumber'd space. Smart.

Insomu'ch. conj. [in so much.]

1. So that; to such a degree that.

It hath ever been the use of the conquerour to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amends made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison, Guardian.

2. This word is growing obsolete.

To INSPE'CT.† v. a. [inspicio, inspectum, Lat.] To look into by way of examination.

Return, ye days, when endless pleasure
I found in reading, or in leisure!
When calm around the common room
I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume;
Rode for a stomach; and inspected,
At annual bottlings, corks selected!
Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

I'nspect.* n. s. [from the verb.] Nice or close examination. Not in use.

Not so the man of philosophick eye

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
Consider every creature. Milton, P. L.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

Inspe'ctor. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A prying examiner.

With their new light our bold inspectors press,
Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness. Denham.

2. A superintendent.

INSPE'RSED.* part. adj. [inspersé, Fr. inspersus, Lat.] Sprinkled or cast upon.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Inspe'rsion. n. s. [inspersio, Lat.] A sprinkling upon. Ainsworth.

INSPE'XIMUS.* n. s. [Lat.] The first word of ancient charters, and letters patent; an exemplification: It implies, We have inspected it.

This road is specified, by the names of "strata" and "magna via," in an inspeximus charter of Henry the Third to Tarent-abbey in Dorsetshire.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 66.

To Insphe're.† v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

I will insphere her
In regions high and starry. Drayton on his Mistress.
Not rubies of the rock such red inspher'd.
Sandys, Lament. ch. 4.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aereal spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton, Comus.

Inspi'rable. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fuliginous steams. Harvey.

Inspira'tion. n. s. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superiour power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.
—How can she then call us by our names,
Unless it be by inspiration? Shakspeare, Com. of Err

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

We to his high inspiration owe,
That what was done before the flood we know. Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
Declares was inspiration, and not guess. Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

To INSPI'RE.† v. n. [inspiro, Lat. inspirer, Fr.]

1. To draw in the breath; opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Walton.

2. To blow, as a gentle wind does.

Her yellow lockes, crisped like golden wyre,
About her shoulders weren loosely shed,
And, when the winde emongst them did inspire,
They waved like a penon wyde dispred.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 30.

To Inspi're. v. a.

1. To breathe into.

Ye nine, descend and sing,
The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisd. xv. 11.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakspeare.
To the heart inspir'd
Vernal delight. Milton, P. L.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion.
Nor the inspir'd
Castalian spring. Milton, P. L.
Erato, thy poet's mind inspire,
And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden, Æn.
The letters are often read to the young religious, to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

5. To draw in with the breath.
By means of sulphurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.
His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;
Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryden.

INSPI'RER. n. s. [from inspire.] He that inspires.
To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspirer of mankind, be all honour. Derham.

To INSPI'RIT. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.
It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Chr. Piety.
A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury.
The courage of Agamemnon is inspirited by love of empire and ambition. Pope, Pref. to the Iliads.
Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm every thought, inspirit every grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

To INSPI'SSATE. v. a. [in and spissus, Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.
Sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon.
This oil, farther inspissated by evaporation, turns into balm. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSPI'SSATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Thick.
The gum or inspissate juice of a plant. Greenhill, Art of Embalm. p. 253.

INSPISSA'TION. n. s. [from inspissate.] The act of making any liquid thick.
The effect is wrought by the inspissation of the air. Bacon.
Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSTABI'LITY. n. s. [instabilitas, Lat. instabilité, Fr. from instabilis, Lat.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.
Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison, Freeholder.

INSTA'BLE.† adj. [instable, old French; instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.
In this instable and uncertain age, you have with that steadiness of mind and clearness of judgement stuck to the truth and purity of the protestant religion, as discerning the vast difference betwixt it and popery. More, Exp. of the Sev. Ch. Ded. to Lord Robarts, (1669.)

INSTA'BLENESS.* n. s. [from instable.] Fickleness; mutability.
There cannot be two more pregnant instances of the lubricity and instableness of mankind, than the decay of these two ancient nations. Howell, Lett. ii. 57.
The very faculty of reason (as we find it too true by late experience) is subject to the same instableness. Howell, Lett. iv. 19.

To INSTA'LL. v. a. [installer, Fr. in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.
She reigns a goddess now among the saints,
That whilom was the saint of shepherds light,
And is installed now in heaven's hight. Spenser.
Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd archbishop of Canterbury. Shakspeare.
The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order. Wotton.

INSTALLA'TION. n. s. [installation, Fr. from install.] The act of giving visible possession of a rank or office, by placing in the proper seat.
Upon the election the bishop gives a mandate for his installation. Ayliffe, Parergon.

INSTA'LMENT.† n. s. [from install.]

1. The act of installing.
It is not easy
To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal? Shakspeare, Rich. III
Would I could hire
These fine invincible fiddlers to play to me
At my instalment. Beaum. and Fl. Prophetess.
The time of his instalment into his priesthood. Hammond, Works, iv. 526.

2. The seat in which one is installed.
Search Windsor-castle, elves,
The several chairs of order look you scour;
Each fair instalment, coat and several crest
With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shakspeare.

I'NSTANCE. } I'NSTANCY. } n. s. [instance, Fr.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.
Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hooker.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument. Not now in use.
She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
The instances that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love. Shakspeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.
The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years. Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. Example; document.
Yet doth this accident
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shakspeare.
In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace; sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.
We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.
The greatest saints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury.
Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat. Bentley.
The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common. Baker on Learning.

5. State of any thing.
These seem as if, in the time of Edward the First, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has endeavoured to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Rogers.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride. Pope.

If Eusebia has lived as free from sin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. Law, Serious Call.

To I'NSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To give or offer an example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three about which he makes the loudest clamor. Tillotson.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have excelled the ancients; and I would instance in Shakspeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter sort. Dryden, Juv.

I'NSTANCED.* part. adj. [from instance.] Given in proof, or as an example.

That worthy divine did not heedfully observe the great difference betwixt these instanced degrees. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 5.

I'NSTANT. adj. [instant, Fr. instans, Lat.]

Our good old friend bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The instant stroke of death denounc'd to-day,
Remov'd far off. Milton, P. L.

Nor native country thou, nor friend shalt see;
Nor war hast thou to wage, nor year to come;
Impending death is thine, and instant doom. Prior.

3. Quick; making no delay.

Instant without disturb they took alarm. Milton, P. L.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate;
Instant he flew with hospitable haste,
And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd. Pope.

I'NSTANT. n. s. [instant, Fr.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession. Locke.

There is scarce an instant between their flourishing and their not being. Hooker.

Her nimble body yet in time must move,
And not in instants through all places stride;
But she is nigh and far, beneath, above,
In point of time, which thought cannot divide. Davies.

At any instant of time the moving atom is but in one single point of the line; therefore all but that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporary with it. Bentley, Serm.

2. A particular time.

I can at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in low and commercial language for a day of the present or current month.

INSTI'NCT.† adj. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Latin.] Moved; animated.

Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound
The chariot of paternal deity,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,
Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd,
By four cherubick shapes. Milton, P. L.

Coffee-house wits, instinct by, me, can correct an author's style, and display his minutest errors, without understanding a syllable of his matter or his language! Swift, Battle of the Books.

I'NSTINCT. n. s. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Lat. This word had its accent formerly on the last syllable.] Desire or aversion acting in the mind without the intervention of reason or deliberation; the power determining the will of brutes.

In him they fear your highness' death,
And mere instinct of love and loyalty,
Makes them thus forward in his banishment. Shakspeare.

Thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince: instinct is a great matter. I was a coward on instinct; I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thee for a true prince. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

But providence or instinct of nature seems,
Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted,
To have guided me aright. Milton, S. A.

Nature first pointed out my Portius to me,
And easily taught me by her secret force
To love thy person, ere I knew thy merit;
Till what was instinct grew up into friendship. Addison.

The philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
Instinct and reason how shall we divide? Prior.

Reason serves when press'd:
But honest instinct comes a volunteer. Pope.

INSTI'NCTED. adj. [instinctus, Lat.] Impressed as an animating power. This, neither musical nor proper, was perhaps introduced by Bentley.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instincted through the whole, which the defedation of so many parts by a bad printer and a worse editor could not hinder from shining forth. Bentley, Pref. to Milton.

INSTI'NCTION.* n. s. [instinctus, Lat.] Instinct. This word preceded instinct. Obsolete.

This natural instinction of creatures. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 149.

INSTI'NCTIVE. adj. [from instinct.] Acting without the application of choice or reason; rising in the mind without apparent cause.

Rais'd
By quick instinctive motion, up I sprung,
As thitherward endeavouring. Milton, P. L.

It will be natural that Ulysses's mind should forebode; and it appears that the instinctive presage was a favourite opinion of Homer's. Broome on the Odyssey.

INSTI'NCTIVELY. adv. [from instinctive.] By instinct; by the call of nature.

The very rats
Instinctively had quit it. Shakspeare, Tempest.

If children were early instituted, knowledge would insensibly insinuate itself. Decay of Chr. Piety.
3. To invest with the spiritual part of a benefice. See the fifth sense of INSTITUTION.
No bishop shall institute any to a benefice, who hath been ordained by any other bishop, except he first shew unto him his letters of orders. Const. and Can. Eccl. 39.

I'NSTITUTE.† n. s. [institute, Fr. institutum, Lat.]
1. Established law; settled order.
Such is the subject of the institute,
And universal body of the law. Marlowe, Trag. of Dr. Faustus.
This law, though custom now directs the course,
As nature's institute, is yet in force
Uncancell'd, though disused. Dryden.
2. Precept; maxim; principle.
Thou art pale in mighty studies grown,
To make the Stoick institutes thy own. Dryden, Pers.

INSTITU'TION.† n. s. [institution, Fr. institutio, Lat.]
1. Act of establishing.
2. Establishment; settlement.
The institution of God's Law is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hooker.
It became him by whom all things are, to be the way of salvation to all, that the institution and restitution of the world might be both wrought with one hand. Hooker.
This unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, is what legislators have endeavoured, in their several schemes or institutions of government, to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.
3. Positive law.
They quarrel sometimes with the execution of laws, and sometimes with the institution. Temple.
The holiness of the first fruits and the lump is an holiness merely of institution, outward and nominal; whereas the holiness of the root is an holiness of nature, inherent and real. Atterbury.
The law and institution founded by Moses was to establish religion, and to make mercy and peace known to the whole earth. Forbes.
4. Education.
After baptism, when it is in infancy received, succeeds instruction and institution in the nature and several branches of that vow, which was made at the font, in a short intelligible manner. Hammond on Fundamentals.
It is a necessary piece of providence in the institution of our children, to train them up to somewhat in their youth, that may honestly entertain them in their age. L'Estrange.
His learning was not the effect of precept or institution. Bentley.
5. The act of investing a clerk presented to a rectory or vicarage with the spiritual part of his benefice. See COLLATION, and INDUCTION.
No person shall hereafter be received into the ministry, nor either by institution or collation admitted to any ecclesiastical living, nor suffered to preach, &c. except he be licensed either by the archbishop, or the bishop of the diocese where he is to be placed. Const. and Canons Eccl. 36.

INSTITU'TIONARY. adj. [from institution.] Elemental; containing the first doctrines, or principles of doctrine.
That it was not out of fashion Aristotle declareth in his politicks, amongst the institutionary rules of youth. Brown.

I'NSTITUTIVE.* adj. [from institute.] Able to establish.

I'NSULT.† n. s. [insultus, Lat. insult, Fr.]

1. The act of leaping upon any thing. In this sense it has the accent on the last syllable: the sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says, citing Dryden.

The bull's insult at four she may sustain,
But after ten from nuptial rites refrain. Dryden, Virg.

Terrible balls of flame bursting forth near the foundations with frequent insults, and burning divers times the workmen, rendered the place inaccessible. Whitby, Gen. Pref. to his Paraphr. on the N. Test. p. xxviii.

2. Act or speech of insolence or contempt.

The ruthless sneer that insult adds to grief. Savage.

Take the sentence seriously, because railleries are an insult on the unfortunate. Broome on the Odyssey.

To INSU'LT. v. a. [insulter, Fr. insulto, Lat.]

1. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was glutted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of king Priam. Pope.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,
Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air. Dryden.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,
Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,
Yet still they find a future task remain,
To turn the soil. Dryden, Virg.

To INSU'LT.* v. n. To behave with insolent triumph.

There shall the spectator see some insulting with joy, others fretting with melancholy. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

INSULTA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. insultation; from insult.] Insulting or injurious treatment.

Continual care checks the spirit; continual labour checks the body; and continual insultation, both. Feltham, Res. i. 18.

Hard and scant diet, irons, insultations, scorns, and extremities of ill usage of all kinds. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 128.

Ev'n man, the merciless insulter man,
Man, who rejoices in our sex's weakness,
Shall pity thee. Rowe, Jane Shore.

INSU'LTING.* n. s. [from insult.] An act or speech of contempt or insolence.

Grievous reproaches, and scornful insultings over him in his afflictions. Barrow, Works, i. 294.

INSU'LTINGLY. adv. [from insulting.] With contemptuous triumph.

Insultingly, he made your love his boast,
Gave me my life, and told me what it cost. Dryden.

To INSU'ME.* v. a. [insumo, Lat.] To take in.

In dressing the roots, be as sparing as possible of the fibres, which are as it were the emulgent veins, which insume and convey the nourishment to the whole tree. Evelyn's Earth.

INSUPERABI'LITY. n. s. [from insuperable.] The quality of being invincible.

INSU'PERABLE.† adj. [insuperable, old Fr. insuperabilis, Lat.] Invincible; insurmountable; not to be conquered; not to be overcome.

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it. Digby on Bodies.

Much might be done, would we but endeavour; nothing is insuperable to pains and patience. Ray on the Creation.

And middle natures how they long to join,
Yet never pass th' insuperable line. Pope.

INSU'PERABLENESS. n. s. [from insuperable.] Invincibleness; impossibility to be surmounted.

INSU'PERABLY. adv. [from insuperable.] Invincibly; insurmountably.

Between the grain and the vein of a diamond there is this difference, that the former furthers, the latter, being so insuperably hard, hinders the splitting of it. Grew, Mus.

INSUPPO'RTABLE. adj. [insupportable, Fr. in and supportable.] Intolerable; insufferable; not to be endured.

A disgrace put upon a man in company is insupportable; it is heightened according to the greatness, and multiplied according to the number of the persons that hear. South.

The baser the enemies are, the more insupportable is the insolence. L'Estrange.

The thought of being nothing after death is a burden insupportable to a virtuous man: we naturally aim at happiness, and cannot bear to have it confined to our present being. Dryden.

To those that dwell under or near the Equator, this Spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable Summer; and as for those countries that are nearer the poles, a perpetual Spring will not do their business. Bentley.

INSUPPO'RTABLENESS. n. s. [from insupportable.] Insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Then fell she to so pitiful a declaration of the insupportableness of her desires, that Dorus's ears procured his eyes with tears to give testimony how much they suffered for her suffering. Sidney.

INSUPPO'RTABLY. adv. [from insupportable.] Beyond endurance.

But safest he who stood aloof,
When insupportably his foot advanc'd,
In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools,
Spurn'd them to death by troops. Milton, S. A.

The first day's audience sufficiently convinced me, that the poem was insupportably too long. Dryden.

INSUPPRE'SSIBLE.* adj. [in and suppressible.] Not to be concealed or suppressed.

Such an example have we in Addison; which, though hitherto suppressed, yet, when once known, is insuppressible, of a nature too rare, too striking to be forgotten. Young, Conject. on Orig. Composition.

INSUPPRE'SSIVE.* adj. [in and suppressive.] Not to be kept under; not to be suppressed.

Do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

An insuppressive spring will toss him up,
In spite of fortune's load. Young, Night Th. 7.

INSU'RABLE.* adj. [from To insure.] Capable of being insured, that is, of being exempted from hazard, or entitled to certain advantages, by paying a certain sum: as, the goods are insurable; the life of the person is insurable.

INSU'RANCE.* n. s. [from insure.] Exemption from hazard, obtained by payment of a certain sum; a method of providing for a sum which might be lost on the death of a person, or of securing to the heir a certain sum at the person's decease. See ENSURANCE.

INSU'RANCER.* n. s. One who promises a kind of security. See ENSURANCER.

The far-fam'd sculptor, and the laurell'd bard,
Those bold insurancers of deathless fame,
Supply their little feeble aids in vain. Blair, The Grave.

INSU'RER.* See ENSURER.

INSU'RGENT.* n. s. [insurgens, Lat.] One who rises in open rebellion against the established government of his country.

On the part of his imperial majesty, the insurgents were not treated with lenity. Guthrie, Netherlands.

INSURMOU'NTABLE. adj. [insurmontable, Fr. in and surmountable.] Insuperable; unconquerable.

This difficulty is insurmountable, till I can make simplicity and variety the same. Locke.

Hope thinks nothing difficult; despair tells us, that difficulty is insurmountable. Watts.

INSURMOU'NTABLY. adv. [from insurmountable.] Invincibly; unconquerably.

INSURRE'CTION.† n. s. [insurrectio, Lat. from insurgo, to rise against. The old French language has insurrection, not in this sense, but in that of lifting up, elevation.] A seditious rising; a rebellious commotion.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,
And the first motion, all the interim is
Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

This city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein. Ezra.

There shall be a great insurrection upon those that fear the Lord. 2 Esd. xvi. 70.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The trade of Rome had like to have suffered another great stroke by an insurrection in Egypt. Arbuthnot.

INSURRE'CTIONARY.* adj. [from insurrection.] Suitable to an insurrection.

Churches, play-houses, coffee-houses, all alike are destined to be mingled, and equalised, and blended into one common rubbish; and well sifted, and lixiviated, to crystallize into true democratick explosive insurrectionary nitre. Burke, Lett. to a Noble Lord.

INSUSCE'PTIBLE.* adj. [in and susceptible.] Not susceptible; not capable.

I find in the bowels of your last much harsh and stiff matter from Scotland, and I believe insusceptible of any farther concoction, unless it be with much time, "quod concoquit omnia." Wotton, Lett. dat. 1638, Rem. p. 374.

INTE'GRITY. n. s. [integrité, Fr. integritas, from integer, Lat.]

1. Honesty; uncorrupt mind; purity of manners; uncorruptedness.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding. Swift.

The libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices. Rogers.

2. Purity; genuine unadulterated state.

Language continued long in its purity and integrity. Hale.

3. Intireness; unbroken whole.

Take away this transformation, and there is no chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action. Broome.

INTE'GUMENT.† n. s. [integumentum, intego, Lat.] Any thing that covers or envelopes another.

I make no question but all kinds of wits and capacities may be found under all tinctures and integuments. Wotton on Education, Rem. p. 79

He could no more live without his frieze-coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body. Addison.

I'NTELLECT.† n. s. [intellect, Fr. intellectus, Lat. "This most pure parte of the soule, and (as Aristotle sayeth) divine, impassible, and incorruptible, is named in Latin intellectus; whereunto I can find no proper Englishe but understandinge. For intelligence, which commeth of intelligentia, is the perceiving of that which is first conceived by understanding, called intellectus.—Wherefore I wyll use this worde understanding for intellectus, untyll some other more proper Englyshe worde may be founden and broughte in custome." Sir Tho. Elyot, Gov. edit. 1580. fol. 201.] The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
All intellect, all sense. Milton, P. L.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South.

INTELLE'CTION. n. s. [intellection, Fr. intellectio, Lat.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville, Scepsis.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley, Serm.

INTELLE'CTIVE.† adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intellect.]

1. Having power to understand.

Because the intellective soul is not of necessity serving to any other faculty or power, therefore is she as lady, mistress, and queen, over all the other powers, faculties, or virtues of the soul. Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, (1606,) p. 46.

In the section of bodies, we find man, of all sensible creatures, to have the fullest brain to his proportion, and that it was so provided by the Supreme Wisdom for the lodging of the intellective faculties. Wotton on Education, Rem. p. 81.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanville.

2. To be perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

Instead of beginning with arts most easy, (and those be such as are most obvious to the sense,) they present their young unmatriculated novices with the most intellective abstractions of logick and metaphysicks. Milton on Education.

INTELLE'CTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion. Bp. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logick is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bower for sorrow made,
The melancholy Cowley lay. Cowley.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hooker.

Who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? Milton, P. L.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLE'CTUAL. n. s. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband —
Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton, P. L.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Glanville, Scepsis.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning presences. Glanville.

INTELLE'CTUALIST.✱ n. s. [from intellectual.] One who over-rates the human understanding.

Upon these intellectualists, which are notwithstanding commonly taken for the most sublime and divine philosophers, Heraclitus gave a just censure. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. I.

INTELLECTUA'LITY.✱ n. s. [from intellectual.] The state of intellectual power.

Seneca signifies little in this place, he being no better than a cosmoplastick atheist, i. e. he made a certain plastick or spermatick nature, devoid of all animality or conscious intellectuality, to be the highest principle in the universe. Hallywell, Melampr. (1681,) p. 84.

INTE'LLIGENCE.† } n. s. [intelligence, French;
INTE'LLIGENCY. } intelligentia, Latin. "Intelligence, which commeth of intelligentia, is the perceiving of that which is first conceived by understanding, called intellectus. Also intelligence is now used for an elegant worde, where there [are] mutuall treaties or appoyntments, eyther by letters or messages, speciallye concerninge warres, or like other great affaires, between princes or noble men." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. ed. 1580. fol. 201.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

It was perceived there had not been in the catholicks so much foresight as to provide that true intelligence might pass between them of what was done. Hooker.

He furnished his employed men liberally with money, to draw on and reward intelligences; giving them also in charge to advertise continually what they found. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelligence from better authors than persons of inferior note. Hayward.

Let all the passages
Be well secured, that no intelligence
May pass between the prince and them. Denham, Sophy.

Those tales had been sung to lull children asleep, before ever Berosus set up his intelligence office at Coos. Bentley.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which men live one with another.

Factious followers are worst to be liked, which follow not upon affection to him with whom they range themselves; whereupon commonly ensueth that ill intelligence that we see between great personages. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

3. Spirit; unbodied mind.

How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure
Intelligence of heaven! Milton, P. L.

There are divers ranks of created beings intermediate between the glorious God and man, as the glorious angels and created intelligences. Hale.

They hoped to get the favour of the houses, and by the favour of the houses they hoped for that of the intelligencies, and by their favour for that of the supreme God. Stillingfleet.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great variety and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole mass of matter is under the conduct of a mighty intelligence. Collier.

Satan, appearing like a cherub to Uriel, the intelligence of the sun circumvented him even in his own province. Dryden.

4. Understanding; skill.

Heaps of huge words, up hoarded hideously,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie Spenser.

Inte'lligencer. n. s. [from intelligence.] One who sends or conveys news; one who gives notice of private or distant transactions; one who carries messages between parties.

His eyes, being his diligent intelligencers, could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable. Sidney.

How deep you were within the books of heaven?
To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;
The very opener and intelligencer
Between the grace and sanctities of heav'n,
And our dull workings. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

If they had instructions to that purpose, they might be the best intelligencers to the king of the true state of his whole kingdom. Bacon.

They are the best sort of intelligencers; for they have a way into the inmost closets of princes. Howell.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers, who make them acquainted with the conversation of the whole kingdom. Spectator.

Inte'lligencing.* adj. [from intelligence.] Conveying information; giving notice of private or distant transactions.

A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o'door:
A most intelligencing bawd! Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

He [an apparitor] is a cunning hunter, uncoupling his intelligencing hounds under hedges, in thickets, and corn-fields, who follow the chase to city-suburbs. Overbury, Charact. sign. I. 3.

I'll have your ears nailed for intelligencing o' the pillory. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

The address — gave cause of suspicion to the Earl of Richmond's intelligencing friends, that the king had a purpose to marry the lady Elizabeth. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 127.

That sad intelligencing tyrant, that mischiefs the world with his mines of Ophir. Milton, Of Ref. in Engl. B. 2.

Inte'lligent. adj. [intelligent, Fr. intelligens, Latin.]

1. Knowing; instructed; skilful.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern that is the more intelligent, as Aristotle would have it; but there is no less required for government, courage to protect, and above all honesty. Bacon.

He of times,
Intelligent, the harsh hyperborean ice
Shuns for our equal winters; when our suns
Cleave the chill'd soil, he backwards wings his way. Philips.

Trace out the numerous footsteps of the presence and interposition of a most wise and intelligent architect throughout all this stupendous fabrick. Woodward.

2. It has of before the thing.

Intelligent of seasons, they set forth
Their aery caravan. Milton, P. L.

3. Giving information.

Servants, who seem no less,
Which are to France the spies and speculations
Intelligent of our state. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Intellige'ntial. adj. [from intelligence.]

1. Consisting of unbodied mind.

Food alike those pure
Intelligential substances require,
As doth your rational. Milton, P. L.

2. Intellectual; exercising understanding.

In at his mouth
The devil enter'd; and his brutal sense,
His heart or head possessing, soon inspir'd
With act intelligential. Milton, P. L.

Intelligibi'lity.† n. s. [from intelligible.]

1. Possibility to be understood.

This, while it added to intelligibility, would take from psalmody its tedious drawl, and certainly leave it sufficient gravity. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 223.

2. The power of understanding; intellection. Not proper.

The soul's nature consists in intelligibility. Glanville.

INTE'LLIGIBLE. adj. [intelligible, Fr. intelligibilis, Lat.] To be conceived by the understanding; possible to be understood.

We shall give satisfaction to the mind, to shew it a fair and intelligible account of the deluge. Burnet.

Something must be lost in all translations, but the sense will remain, which would otherwise be maimed, when it is scarce intelligible. Dryden.

Many natural duties relating to God, ourselves, and our neighbours, would be exceeding difficult for the bulk of mankind to find out by reason; therefore it has pleased God to express them in a plain manner, intelligible to souls of the lowest capacity. Watts.

Inte'lligibleness. n. s. [from intelligible.] Possibility to be understood; perspicuity.

It is in our ideas that both the rightness of our knowledge, and the propriety or intelligibleness of our speaking, consists. Locke.

Inte'lligibly. adv. [from intelligible.] So as to be understood; clearly; plainly.

The genuine sense, intelligibly told,
Shews a translator both discreet and bold. Roscommon.

To write of metals and minerals intelligibly, is a task more difficult than to write of animals. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

INTE'MERATE.† adj. [intemeratus, Latin.] Undefiled; unpolluted.

The entire and intemerate comeliness of virtues. Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) Pr. A. iiij. b.

Inte'merateness.* n. s. [from intemerate.] State of being undefiled.

They shall ever keep the sincerity and intemerateness of the fountain, whence they are derived. Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 281.

Inte'mperament. n. s. [in and temperament.] Bad constitution.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, and others upon the afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey.

Inte'mperance. } Inte'mperancy. } n. s. [intemperance, Fr. intemperantia, Lat.]

1. Want of temperance; want of moderation: commonly excess in meat or drink.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Another law of Lycurgus induced to intemperancy and all kind of incontinency. Hakewill.

Some, as thou saw'st, by violent stroke shall die;
By fire, flood, famine, by intemperance more
In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring
Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear; that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve
Shall bring on men. Milton, P. L.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness and intemperance, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts.

2. Excessive addiction to any appetite or affection.

INTE'MPERATE. adj. [intemperant, Fr. intemperatus, Latin.]

1. Immoderate in appetite; excessive in meat or drink; drunken; gluttonous.

More women should die than men, if the number of burials answered in proportion to that of sicknesses; but men, being more intemperate than women, die as much by reason of their vices, as women do by the infirmity of their sex. Graunt.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable doubts, which, over their cups or their coffee, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the intemperate man to abandon his revels, and I dare undertake that all their giant-like objections shall vanish. South.

2. Passionate; ungovernable; without rule.

You are more intemperate in your blood
Than those pamper'd animals,
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

Use not thy mouth to intemperate swearing; for therein is the word of sin. Ecclus. xxiii. 13.

3. Excessive; exceeding the just or convenient mean; as, an intemperate climate; we have intemperate weather.

To INTE'MPERATE.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To disorder; to put any thing out of its just or convenient state.

The fifth age is virile, and the media between young and old age; yet doth it not so participate of either, as to affect or intemperate it: as it beginneth at thirty five, so it extendeth to forty nine. Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, p. 92.

INTE'MPERATELY. adv. [from intemperate.]

1. With breach of the laws of temperance.

How grossly do many of us contradict the plain precepts of the Gospel, by living intemperately or unjustly? Tillotson.

2. Immoderately; excessively.

Do not too many believe no religion to be pure, but what is intemperately rigid? Whereas no religion is true that is not peaceable as well as pure. Sprat.

INTE'MPERATENESS. n. s. [from intemperate.]

1. Want of moderation.

2. Unseasonableness of weather. Ainsworth.

INTE'MPERATURE.† n. s. [intemperature, French; from intemperate.] Excess of some quality. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

INTEMPE'STIVE.* adj. [intempestif, French; intempestivus, Latin.] Unseasonable; untimely; not suitable to time or occasion. This word was formerly much in use: it is now perhaps obsolete.

Many diseases accompany, as incubus, apoplexy,—frequent wakings, and terrible dreams; intempestive laughing, weeping, sighing. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 180.

Being aged and diseased — he married a widow of London. A chief favourite of that time, — hearing of this intempestive marriage, took advantage thereof, [and] caused it to be told to the queen. Harington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 114.

Intempestive bashfulness gets nothing. Hales, Rem. p. 143.

INTEMPE'STIVELY.* adv. [from intempestive.] Unsuitably to time or occasion.

They [indiscreet pastors] still aggravate sin, thunder out God's judgements without respect, intempestively rail at and pronounce them damned, in all auditories, for giving so much to sports and honest recreations, making every small fault, and thing indifferent, an irremissible offence. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 698.

INTEMPESTI'VITY.* n. s. [from intempestive.] Unsuitableness to time or occasion.

Our moral books tell us of a vice, which they call ἀκαιρία, intempestivity; an indiscretion, by which unwise and unexperienced men see not what befits times, persons, occasions. Hales, Serm. at Eton, p. 4.

Courtesies, not acknowledged, are suspected that they were either guilty of intempestivity and unseasonableness, or else of want of worth and glory. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 127.

INTE'NABLE.† adj. [in and tenable.] Indefensible; as, an intenable opinion: an intenable fortress.

His lordship's [Bolinbroke's] proposition may be expressed in plainer terms, "That the more the world has advanced in real knowledge, the more it has discovered of the intenable pretensions of the Gospel." To expose the futility of his maxim, I shall first of all shew, that it was not ignorance which gave the Gospel its early credit: which is a presumption, at least, that knowledge hath not since hurt it.—From [the] presumptions I proceed to a direct proof, that as the infant growth of the Gospel was not retarded by that flourishing state of knowledge which saw it in its birth; so the revived knowledge of these latter ages did greatly support the established honours of Revelation, by illustrating its primeval truths. Since the more careful cultivation of natural and moral science; Philosophy, History, and Antiquity, have all contributed to spread a new light over the evidences of it. Warburton, Serm. xiii.

To INTE'ND. v. a. [intendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out. Obsolete.

The same advauncing high above his head,
With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To enforce: to make intense; to strain.

What seems to be the ground of the assertion, is the magnified quality of this star, conceived to cause or intend the heat of this season, we find that wiser antiquity was not of this opinion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

By this the lungs are intended or remitted. Hale.

This vis inertiæ is essential to matter, because it neither can be intended or remitted in the same body; but is always proportional to the quantity of matter. Cheyne.

Magnetism may be intended and remitted, and is found only in the magnet and in iron. Newton, Opt.

3. To regard; to attend; to take care of.

This they should carefully intend, and not when the sacrament is administered, imagine themselves called only to walk up and down in a white and shining garment. Hooker.

Having no children, she did with singular care and tenderness intend the education of Philip. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The king prayed them to have patience till a little smoke, that was raised in his country, was over; slighting, as his manner was, that openly, which nevertheless he intended seriously. Bacon, Hen. VII.

4. To pay regard or attention to. This sense is now little used.

They could not intend to the recovery of that country of the north. Spenser.

Neither was there any who might share in the government, while the king intended his pleasure. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The earl was a very acute and sound speaker, when he would intend it. Wotton.

Go therefore, mighty powers! intend at home,
While here shall be our home, what best may ease
The present misery. Milton, P. L.

Their beauty they, and we our loves suspend;
Nought can our wishes, save thy health, intend. Waller.

5. To mean; to design.

The opinion she had of his wisdom was such as made her esteem greatly of his words; but that the words themselves sounded so, as she could not imagine what they intended. Sidney.

The gods would not have delivered a soul into the body, which hath arms and legs, only instruments of doing, but that it were intended the mind should employ them. Sidney.

Thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

According to this model Horace writ his odes and epodes; for his satires and epistles, being intended wholly for instruction, required another style. Dryden.

INTE'NDANT. n. s. [French.] An officer of the highest class, who oversees any particular allotment of the publick business.

Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicrates, his intendant general of marine, have both left relations of the Indies. Arbuthnot.

INTE'NDER.* n. s. [from intend.] One who has intention to do a thing. Sherwood.

They that do me good, and know not of it, are causes of our benefit, though I do not owe them my thanks; and I will rather bless them as instruments, than condemn them as not intenders. Feltham, Res. i. 32.

To INTE'NDER.* See To ENTENDER.

INTE'NDIMENT.† n. s. [entendement, Fr. intendimento. Italian.]

1. Attention; patient hearing; accurate examination. This word is only to be found in Spenser.

Be nought hereat dismay'd,
Till well ye wote, by grave intendiment,
What woman, and wherefore, doth me upbraid. Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 31.

2. Understanding; skill.

For she of herbs had great intendiment. Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 32.

3. Consideration; thought.

He that is of reason's skill bereft,
And wants the staff of wisdom him to stay,
Is like a ship in midst of tempest left,
Withouten helme or pilot her to sway:
Full sad and dreadfull is that ship's event;
So is the man that wants intendiment.
Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

INTE'NDMENT. n. s. [entendement, Fr.] Intention; design.

Out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into. Shakspeare.

All that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall more or less within the intendment of this emblem. L'Estrange.

To INTE'NERATE.† v. a. [in and tener, Lat.] To make tender; to soften.

Intenerate that heart, that sets so light
The truest love that ever yet was seen.
Daniel, Sonn. 10. (1594.)

This acknowledgement of your singular love I was never more fit to pay you than at the present, being intenerated in all my inward feelings and affections by new sickness. Wotton, Rem. p. 354.

So have I seen the little purls of a stream sweat through the bottom of a bank, and intenerate the stubborn pavement, till it hath made it fit for the impression of a child's feet. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651.) p. 204.

Autumn vigour gives,
Equal, intenerating, milky grain. Philips.

INTENERA'TION.† n. s. [from intenerate.] The act of softening or making tender.

In living creatures, the noblest use of nourishment is for the prolongation of life, restoration of some degree of youth, and inteneration of the parts. Bacon.

The stuffs died blue, are without any previous inteneration quickly tinged. Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 289.

INTE'NIBLE. adj. [in and tenible.] That cannot hold. Not in use.

I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet, in this captious and intenible sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love. Shakspeare, All's well.

INTE'NSE. adj. [intensus, Lat.]

1. Raised to a high degree; strained; forced; not slight; not lax.

To observe the effects of a distillation prosecuted with so intense and unusual a degree of heat, we ventured to come near. Boyle.

Sublime or low, unbended, or intense,
The sound is still a comment to the sense. Roscommon.

2. Vehement; ardent.

Hebraisms warm and animate our language, and convey our thoughts in more ardent and intense phrases. Addison.

3. Kept on the stretch; anxiously attentive.

But in disparity
The one intense; the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton, P. L.

INTE'NSELY.† adv. [from intense.]

1. To a great degree; not slightly; not remissly.

If an Englishman considers our world, how intensely it is heated, he cannot suppose that it will cool again. Addison.

2. Attentively; earnestly.

To persons young, and that look intensely, if it be dark, there appear many strange images moving to and fro.
Spencer on Vulg. Proph. p. 103.

INTE'NSENESS.† n. s. [from intense.]

1. The state of being enforced in a high degree; force; contrariety to laxity or remission.

The water of springs and rivers, that sustain a diminution from the heat above, being evaporated more or less in proportion to the greater or lesser intenseness of heat. Woodward.

The quantity of life is to be estimated not merely from the duration, but also from the intenseness of living.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, §. 109.

2. Vehemence; ardency.

The ingemination of the Hebrew [words] meant some intenseness in the act. Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. Tr. p. 135.

Our Saviour, as man, had an angel from heaven to wait upon him, and strengthen him in his deep distress; he was in agony; and prayed with the utmost ardency and intenseness.
Blackwall, Sacr. Class. ii. 279.

3. Great attention; earnestness.

Some may affirm this, who do not take the trouble to reflect on the state of their mind while sleeping, because of their intenseness on their waking thoughts and business, or otherwise.
Baxter on the Soul, ii. 117.

Our religion has been sincerely believed, and strenuously defended, by men who have ascended the summit of human knowledge by the vigour of their genius, and the intenseness of their application. Professor White, Serm. p. 38.

INTE'NSION. n. s. [intension, Fr. intensio, Lat.] The act of forcing or straining any thing; contrariety to remission or relaxation.

Sounds will be carried further with the wind than against the wind; and likewise do rise and fall with the intension or remission of the wind. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Faith differs from hope in the extension of its object, and in the intension of degree. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

INTE'NSITY.* n. s. [from intense.] Excess.

The number engaged in crimes, instead of turning them into laudable acts, only augments the quantity and the intensity of the guilt. Burke.

INTE'NSIVE. adj. [from intense.]

1. Stretched or encreased with respect to itself; which may admit encrease of degree.

As his perfection is infinitely greater than the perfection of a man, so it is infinitely greater than the perfection of an angel; and were it not infinitely greater than the perfection of an angel, it could not be infinitely greater than the perfection of a man, because the intensive distance between the perfection of an angel and of a man is but finite. Hale.

2. Intent; unremitted.

Tired with that assiduous attendance and intensive circumspection, which a long fortune did require, he was not unwilling to bestow upon another some part of the pains. Wotton.

INTE'NSIVELY. adv. By encrease of degree.

God and the good angels are more free than we are, that is, intensively in the degree of freedom, but not extensively in the latitude of the object; according to a liberty of exercise, but not of specification. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INTE'NT. adj. [intentus, Lat.]

1. Anxiously diligent; fixed with close application: formerly with to.

Distractions in England made most men intent to their own safety. King Charles.

2. Commonly with on.

When we use but those means which God hath laid before us, it is a good sign that we are rather intent upon God's glory than our own conveniency. Bp. Taylor.

The general himself had been more intent upon his command. Clarendon.

They on their mirth and dance
Intent. Milton, P. L.

Of action eager, and intent on thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought. Dryden.

Were men as intent upon this as on things of lower concernment, there are none so enslaved to the necessities of life, who might not find many vacancies that might be husbanded to this advantage of their knowledge. Locke.

Whilst they are intent on one particular part of their theme, they bend all their thoughts to prove or disprove some proposition that relates to that part, without attention to the consequences that may affect another. Watts.

Be intent and solicitous to take up the meaning of the speaker. Watts.

INTE'NT.† n. s. [entente, old French; from intendo, Lat.]

1. A design; a purpose; a drift; a view formed; meaning.

Although the Scripture of God be stored with infinite variety of matter in all kinds, although it abound with all sorts of laws, yet the principal intent of Scripture is to deliver the laws of duties supernatural. Hooker.

Whereas commandment was given to destroy all places where the Canaanites had served the gods, this precept had reference unto a special intent and purpose, which was that there should be but one place whereunto the people might bring offerings. Hooker.

Those that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men. Shakspeare.

I'll urge his hatred more to Clarence;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

This fury fit for her intent she chose;
One who delights in wars. Dryden, Æn.

The Athenians sent their fleet to Sicily, upon pretence only to assist the Leontines; but with an intent to make themselves masters of that island. Grew.

Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To all intents. In all senses, whatever be meant or designed.

There is an incurable blindness caused by a resolution not to see; and, to all intents and purposes, he who will not open his eyes is for the present as blind as he that cannot. South.

He was miserable to all intent and purposes. L'Estrange.

INTE'NTION. n. s. [intention, Fr. intensio, Lat.]

1. Eagerness of desire; closeness of attention; deep thought; vehemence or ardour of mind.

Intention is when the mind with great earnestness, and of choice, fixes its view on any idea, considers it on every side, and will not be called off by the ordinary solicitation of other ideas. Locke.

Effectual prayer is joined with a vehement intention of the inferior powers of the soul, which cannot therein long continue without pain: it hath been therefore thought good, by turns, to interpose still somewhat for the higher part of the mind and the understanding to work upon. Hooker.

She did course o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

In persons possessed with other notions of religion, the understanding cannot quit these but by great examination; which cannot be done without some labour and intention of the mind, and the thoughts dwelling a considerable time upon the survey and discussion of each particular. South.

2. Design; purpose.

I wish others the same intention, and greater successes. Temple.

Most part of chronical distempers proceed from laxity of the fibres; in which case the principal intention is to restore the tone of the solid parts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The state of being intense or strained. This for distinction is more generally and more conveniently written intension.

The operations of agents admit of intention and remission; but essences are not capable of such variation. Locke.

INTE'NTIONAL. adj. [intentionel, Fr. from intention.] Designed; done by design.

The glory of God is the end which every intelligent being is bound to consult, by a direct and intentional service. Rogers.

INTE'NTIONALLY. adv. [from intentional.]

1. By design; with fixed choice.

I find in myself that this inward principle doth exert many of its actions intentionally and purposely. Hale.

2. In will, if not in action.

Whenever I am wishing to write to you, I shall conclude you are intentionally doing so to me. Atterbury to Pope.

INTE'NTIVE.† adj. [ententif, French; from intent. Formerly applied to persons, like attentive. "Fulgence, an ententife doctor." Fox's Acts, &c. Exam. of W. Thorpe.] Diligently applied; busily attentive.

Where the object is fine and accurate, it conduceth much to have the sense intentive and erect. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The naked relation, at least the intentive consideration of that, is able still, and at this disadvantage of time, to rend the hearts of pious contemplators. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INTE'NTIVELY.† adv. [from intentive.] With application; closely.

Let us wait reverently and intentively upon this Bethesda of God, that when the angel shall descend and move the water, our souls may be healed. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

INTE'NTIVENESS.* n. s. [from intentive.] State of being intentive; diligent employment or application.

The spirit of man, in our peregrination through this life, ought as little to trust flesh and blood, in point of counsel, for an intentiveness upon the progression therein, as a traveller to be advised by his host, whether he should march on, or stay and loiter in his house. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. p. 224.

INTE'NTLY. adv. [from intent.] With close attention; with close application; with eager desire.

If we insist passionately or so intently on the truth of our beliefs, as not to proceed to as vigorous pursuit of all just, sober, and godly living. Hammond on Fundamentals.

The odd paintings of an Indian screen may please a little; but when you fix your eye intently upon them, they appear so disproportioned that they give a judicious eye pain. Atterbury.

The Chian medal seats him with a volume open, and reading intently. Pope.

INTE'NTNESS.† n. s. [from intent.] The state of being intent; anxious application.

When after such a course, either of extreme solicitude or intentness upon business on the one hand, or of gayety and freedom of conversation on the other, the frame of a man's spirit comes to be loose and unfixed, and took off from its usual guard; then let him know that the evil hour is preparing for him, and he for that. South, Serm. vi. 262.

He is more disengaged from his intentness on affairs. Swift.

To INTE'R. v. a. [enterrer, Fr.]

1. To cover under ground; to bury.

Within their chiefest temple I'll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be interr'd. Shakspeare.

To INTERCE'DE. v. n. [interceder, Fr. intercedo, Lat.]

1. To pass between.

He supposeth that a vast period interceded between that origination and the age wherein he lived. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Those superficies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power, and which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton.

2. To mediate; to act between two parties with a view of reconciling differences. It has with if only one part be named, and between if both be named.

Them the glad Son
Presenting, thus to intercede began. Milton, P. L.

Nor was our blessed Saviour only our propitiation to die for us, and procure our atonement, but he is still our advocate, continually interceding with his Father in behalf of all true penitents. Calamy.

I may restore myself into the good graces of my fair criticks, and your lordship may intercede with them on my promise of amendment. Dryden.

Origen denies that any prayer is to be made to them, although it be only to intercede with God for us, but only the Son of God. Stillingfleet.

INTERCE'DER. n. s. [from intercede.] One that intercedes; a mediator.

INTERCE'DING.* n. s. [from intercede.] Intercession.

Besides these offerings, and intercedings, there was something more required of the priest; and that is, blessing.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

To INTERCE'PT. v. a. [intercepter, Fr. interceptus, Lat.]

1. To stop and seize in the way.

The better course should be by planting of garrisons about him, which, whensoever he shall look forth, or be drawn out, shall be always ready to intercept his going or coming.
Spenser on Ireland.

Who intercepts me in my expedition?
— O, she that might have intercepted thee,
By strangling thee. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I then in London, keeper of the king,
Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends,
March'd towards St. Albans to intercept the queen. Shakspeare.

Your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If we hope for things which are at too great a distance from us, it is possible that we may be intercepted by death in our progress towards them. Addison, Spect.

2. To obstruct; to cut off; to stop from being communicated; to stop in the progress. It is used of the thing or person passing.

Though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunes;
For that they will not intercept my tale. Shakspeare.

Behind the hole I fastened to the pasteboard, with pitch, the blade of a sharp knife, to intercept some part of the light which passed through the hole. Newton, Opticks.

3. It is used of the act of passing.

Since death's near, and runs with so much force,
We must meet first, and intercept his course. Dryden.

4. It is used of that to which the passage is directed.

On barbed steeds they rode in proud array,
Thick as the college of the bees in May,
When swarming o'er the dusky fields they fly,
New to the flow'rs, and intercept the sky. Dryden

The direful woes,
Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore,
While storms vindictive intercept the shore. Pope.

INTERCE'PTER.* n. s. [from intercept.] One who stands in the way: an opponent.

That defence thou hast, betake thee to't: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy intercepter, full of despight, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

INTERCE'PTION. n. s. [interception, Fr. interceptio, Lat. from intercept.] Stoppage in course; hindrance; obstruction.

The pillars, standing at a competent distance from the outmost wall, will, by interception of the sight, somewhat in appearance diminish the breadth. Wotton on Architecture.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, but also suffocation, strangulation, or interception of breath. Brown.

INTERCE'SSION. n. s. [intercession, Fr. intercessio, Lat.] Mediation; interposition; agency between two parties; agency in the cause of another, generally in his favour, sometimes against him.

Loving, and therefore constant, he used still the intercession of diligence and faith, ever hoping because he would not put himself into that hell to be hopeless. Sidney.

Can you, when you push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd dotard as you seem to be?
Shakspeare.

He maketh intercession to God against Israel. Rom. xi. 2.

He bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. Isa. liii. 12.

INTERCE'SSOUR. n. s. [intercesseur, Fr. intercessor, Lat.] Mediator; agent between two parties to procure reconciliation.

Behold the heavens! thither thine eyesight bend;
Thy looks, sighs, tears, for intercessours send. Fairfax.

On man's behalf,
Patron or intercessour, none appear'd. Milton, P. L.

When we shall hear our eternal doom from our intercessour, it will convince us, that a denial of Christ is more than transitory words. South.

To INTERCHA'IN. v. a. [inter and chain.] To chain; to link together.

Two bosoms interchained with an oath;
So then two bosoms, and a single troth. Shakspeare.

To INTERCHA'NGE. v. a. [inter and change.]

1. To put each in the place of the other; to give and take mutually; to exchange.

They had left but one piece of one ship, whereon they kept themselves in all truth, having interchanged their cares, while either cared for other, each comforting and counselling how to labour for the better, and to abide the worse. Sidney.

I shall interchange
My wained state for Henry's regal crown. Shakspeare.

2. To succeed alternately.

His faithful friend and brother Euarchus came so mightily to his succour, that, with some interchanging changes of fortune, they begat of a just war, the best child peace. Sidney.

INTERCHA'NGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Commerce; permutation of commodities.

Those have an interchange or trade with Elena. Howell.

2. Alternate succession.

With what delights could I have walk'd thee round,
If I could joy in aught, sweet interchange
Of hill, and valley, rivers, woods, and plains! Milton, P. L.

The original measures of time, by help of the lights in the firmament, are perceptible to us by the interchanges of light and darkness, and succession of seasons. Holder.

Removes and interchanges would often happen in the first ages after the flood. Burnet, Theory.

3. Mutual donation and reception.

Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither. Good Diomede,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange. Shakspeare.

Farewell; the leisure, and the fearful time,
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love,
And ample interchange of sweet discourse. Shakspeare.

Since their more mature dignities made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attornied with interchange of gifts. Shakspeare.

After so vast an obligation, owned by so free an acknowledgement, could any thing be expected but a continual interchange of kindnesses? South.

INTERCHA'NGEABLE. adj. [from interchange.]

1. Given and taken mutually.

So many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counterrolments, running through the hands and resting in the power of so many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

2. Following each other in alternate succession.

Just under the line they may seem to have two winters and two summers; but there also they have four interchangeable seasons, which is enough whereby to measure. Holder.

All along the history of the Old Testament we find the interchangeable providences of God, towards the people of Israel, always suited to their manners. Tillotson.

INTERCHA'NGEABLENESS.* n. s. [from interchangeable.]

1. Exchange.

Nothing but its interchangeableness with cash can restore the credit of paper. Huskisson on Currency, p. 144.

INTERCOMMU'NITY.† n. s. [inter and community.]

1. A mutual communication or community.

Probably it is from this era, that we are to date that remarkable intercommunity and exchange of each other's compositions, which we discover to have taken place at some early period between the French and English minstrels. Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Eng. Minstrels, § 4.

It admits of no tolerance, no intercommunity of various sentiments, not the least difference of opinion. Lowth to Warburton, p. 15.

2. A mutual freedom or exercise of religion.

Admitting each other's pretensions, there must needs be amongst them perfect harmony and intercommunity; there being no room for any other disputes but whose god was most powerful. Such was the root and foundation of this sociability of religion in the ancient world, so much envied by our modern infidels; the effect of their absurdities, as they were religions; and of their imperfections, as they were societies. Warburton, All. of Ch. and State, (1st edit.) p. 139.

INTERCO'STAL. adj. [intercostal, Fr. inter and costa, Lat.] Placed between the ribs.

The diaphragm seems the principal instrument of ordinary respiration, although to restrained respiration the intercostal muscles may concur. Boyle.

Of looks, and smiles; for smiles from reason flow,
To brute deny'd, and are of love the food. Milton, P. L.

2. Communication: followed by with.

The choice of the place requireth many circumstances, as the situation near the sea, for the commodiousness of an intercourse with England. Bacon.

What an honour is it that God should admit us into such a participation of himself? That he should give us minds capable of such an intercourse with the Supreme Mind? Atterbury.

To INTERCU'R.* v. n. [intercurro, Lat.] To intervene; to come in the mean time; to happen.

So that there intercur no sin in the acting thereof. Shelton, D. Quixote, iv. 9.

When the notice of parties intercurs, I do believe, although I am a simple man and a sinner, that there is no kind of enchantment. Ibid. iv. 10.

INTERCU'RRENCE.† n. s. [from intercurro, Lat.]

1. Passage between.

Consider what fluidity saltpetre is capable of, without the intercurrence of a liquor. Boyle.

2. Intervention; occurrence.

To be sagacious in such intercurrences is not superstition, but wary and pious discretion; and to contemn such hints were to be deaf unto the speaking hand of God. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 29.

INTERCU'RRENT.† adj. [intercurrens, Lat.]

1. Running between.

If into a phial, filled with good spirit of nitre, you cast a piece of iron, the liquor, whose parts moved placidly before, meeting with particles in the iron, altering the motion of its parts, and perhaps that of some very subtile intercurrent matter, those active parts presently begin to penetrate, and scatter abroad particles of the iron. Boyle.

2. Occurring; intervening.

Making fair representations of intercurrent passages between them. Barrow, Works, i. 285.

Those household cares, and other intercurrent troubles which his condition then brought with it. Fell, Life of Hammond, § 1.

INTERDE'AL. n. s. [inter and deal.] Traffick; intercourse. Obsolete.

The Gaulish speech is the very British, which is yet retained of the Welshmen and Britons of France; though the alteration of the trading and interdeal with other nations has greatly altered the dialect. Spenser on Ireland.

To INTERDI'CT.† v. a. [interdire, interdict, Fr. interdico, Lat.]

1. To forbid; to prohibit.

He — hongred not after the interdicted fruit, as Adam did. Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 160.

Alone I pass'd, through ways
That brought me on a sudden to the tree
Of interdicted knowledge. Milton, P. L.

By magick fenc'd, by spells encompass'd round,
No mortal touch'd this interdicted ground. Tickell.

2. To prohibit from the enjoyment of communion with the church.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.

I'NTERDICT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prohibition; prohibiting decree.

Amongst his other fundamental laws, he did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions touching entrance of strangers. Bacon.

Those are not fruits forbidden, no interdict
Defends the touching of these viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil. Milton, P. L.

Had he liv'd to see her happy change,
He would have cancell'd that harsh interdict,
And join'd our hands himself. Dryden, Don Sebast.

2. A papal prohibition to the clergy to celebrate the holy offices.

Nani carried himself meritoriously against the pope, in the time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Wotton.

INTERDI'CTION. n. s. [interdiction, Fr. interdictio, Lat. from interdict.]

1. Prohibition; forbidding decree.

Sternly he pronounc'd
The rigid interdiction, which resounds
Yet dreadful in mine ear. Milton, P. L.

2. Curse: from the papal interdict. An improper use of the word.

The truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

INTERDI'CTIVE.* adj. [from interdict.] Having power to prohibit.

A timely separation from the flock by that interdictive sentence; lest his conversation unprohibited, or unbranded, might breathe a pestilential murrain into the other sheep. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

INTERDI'CTORY. adj. [from interdict.] Belonging to an interdiction. Ainsworth.

I'NTERESS.* n. s. [Italian, interesse.] Interest; concern: right or title to. Not now in use.

But wote thou this, thou hardy Titanesse,
That not the worth of any living wight
May challenge aught in heaven's interesse.
Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 33.

I thought, says his majesty [K. Charles I.] I might happily have satisfied all interesses. Id. Reliq. [illegible] p. 144.

To INTERE'SS.† v. a. [interesser, Fr.] To concern; to affect; to give share in; to connect with.

The mystical communion of all faithful men is such as maketh every one to be interessed in those precious blessings, which any one of them receiveth at God's hands. Hooker.

Now, our joy,
Although the last, not least; to whose young love
The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy,
Strive to be interess'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To love our native country, and to study its benefit and its glory, to be interessed in its concerns, is natural to all men. Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

To I'NTEREST.† v. a. [interest, Latin, it concerns.] To concern; to affect; to exert; to give share in.

Scipio, restoring the Spanish bride, gained a great nation to interest themselves for Rome against Carthage. Dryden.

This was a goddess who used to interest herself in marriages. Addison on Medals.

Ill successes did not discourage that ambitious and interested people. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To I'NTEREST. v. n. To affect; to move; to touch with passion; to gain the affections: as, this is an interesting story.

I'NTEREST. n. s. [interest, Lat. intérêt, Fr.]

1. Concern; advantage; good.

O give us a serious comprehension of that one great interest of others, as well as ourselves. Hammond.

Divisions hinder the common interest and publick good. Temple.

There is no man but God hath put many things into his possession, to be used for the common good and interest. Calamy.

2. Influence over others.

They, who had hitherto preserved them, had now lost their interest. Clarendon.

Exert, great God, thy interest in the sky;
Gain each kind power, each guardian deity,
That, conquer'd by the publick vow,
They bear the dismal mischief far away. Prior.

3. Share; part in any thing; participation: as, this is a matter in which we have interest.

Endeavour to adjust the degrees of influence, that each cause might have in producing the effect, and the proper agency and interest of each therein. Watts.

4. Regard to private profit.

Wherever interest or power thinks fit to interfere, it little imports what principles the opposite parties think fit to charge upon each other. Swift.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train. Pope.

5. Money paid for use; usury.

Did he take interest?
—— No, not take interest; not, as you would say,
Directly, int'rest. Shakspeare.

It is a sad life we lead, my dear, to be so teazed; paying interest for old debts, and still contracting new ones. Arbuthnot.

6. Any surplus of advantage.

With all speed
You shall have your desires with interest. Shakspeare.

To INTERFE'RE.† v. n. [inter and ferio, Lat. to strike. Our old lexicography defines it simply, "to knock the legs together." Cockeram. Hence the phrase "an interfering horse." Sherwood. Dr. Johnson notices this sense of the word in a citation from the Farrier's dictionary. Of its application to general use his examples are from Swift and Smalridge. It had been employed at least half a century before they wrote, but with an interpretation accompanying it, as if the use of it was then new: "It is a wonder to see how they interfere, [interfere,] and strike one on another, in the point of worshipping of images." Dr. Westfield's Sermons, 4to. 1646. p. 62.]

1. To interpose; to intermeddle.

So cautious were our ancestors in conversation, as never to interfere with party disputes in the state. Swift.

2. To clash; to oppose each other.

If each acts by an independent power, their commands may interfere. Smalridge, Serm.

3. A horse is said to interfere, when the side of one of his shoes strikes against and hurts one of his fetlocks, or the hitting one leg against another, and striking off the skin. Farrier's Dict.

INTERFE'RENCE.✱ n. s. [from To interfere.] Interposition.

What I have here said of the interference of foreign princes is only the opinion of a private individual. Burke.

INTERFE'RING.✱ n. s. [from To interfere.] Clashing; contradiction; opposition.

A Being who can have no competition, or interfering of interests, with his creatures and his subjects. Bp. Butler, Analog.

INTE'RFLUENT. adj. [interfluens, Lat.] Flowing between.

Air may consist of any terrene or aqueous corpuscles, kept swimming in the interfluent celestial matter. Boyle.

Embracing round this florid earth. Milton, P. L.

INTERJA'CENCY. n. s. [from interjacens, Lat.]

1. The act or state of lying between.

England and Scotland is divided only by the interjacency of the Tweed and some desert ground. Hale.

2. The thing lying between.

Its fluctuations are but motions, which winds, storms, shores, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

INTERJA'CENT. adj. [interjacens, Lat.] Intervening; lying between.

The sea itself must be very broad, and void of little islands interjacent, else will it yield plentiful argument of quarrel to the kingdoms which it serveth. Ralegh.

Through this hole objects that were beyond might be seen distinctly, which would not at all be seen through other parts of the glasses, where the air was interjacent. Newton, Opticks.

To INTERJE'CT.✱ v. a. [interjecter, Fr. interjectus, Lat.] To put between; to throw in; to insert.

I did visit the said ambassador immediately at my return from the king, and saluted him as by express commandment; interjecting some words of mine own gladness. Wotton, Lett. dat. 1619, Rem. p. 282.

This phrase was interjected, when the hearer was not quite so well pleased as the speaker. Johnson, Note on Romeo and Juliet.

To INTERJE'CT.✱ v. n. To come between; to interpose.

He—with his own hand slew Sir Charles Brandon standar-bearer, thinking to have made the next blow as fatal to the earl; but, the confluence of soldiers interjecting, rescued him. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of K. Rich. III. p. 61.

INTERJE'CTION. n. s. [interjection, Fr. interjectio, Lat.]

1. A part of speech that discovers the mind to be seized or affected with some passion: such as are in English, O! alas! ah! Clarke, Lat. Gram.

Their wild natural notes, when they would express their passions, are at the best but like natural interjections, to discover their passions or impressions. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Intervention; interposition; act of something coming between; act of putting something between.

Laughing causeth a continual expulsion of the breath, with the loud noise which maketh the interjection of laughing. Bacon.

I'NTERIM. n. s. [interim, Lat.] Mean time; intervening time.

I a heavy interim shall support,
By his dear absence. Shakspeare, Othello.

One bird happened to be foraging for her young ones, and in this interim comes a torrent that washes away nest, birds, and all. L'Estrange.

In this interim my women asked what I thought. Tatler.

To INTERJO'IN. v. a. [inter and join.] To join mutually; to intermarry.

So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues. Shakspeare, Coriol.

INTE'RIOUR.† adj. [interior, Lat. interieur, Fr.] Internal; inner; not outward; not superficial.

Aiming, belike, at your interiour hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Interlinea'tion. n. s. [inter and lineation.] Correction made by writing between the lines.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

Interli'ning.* n. s. [from interline.] Correction, alteration, or explanation made by writing between the lines.

He cancell'd an old will, and forg'd a new;
Made wealthy at the small expence of signing,
With a wet seal, and a fresh interlining. Dryden, Juv.

The two papers found in his [K. Charles the Second's] strong box concerning religion, and afterwards published by his brother, looked like study and reasoning. Tenison told me, he saw the original in Pepys's hand, to whom king James trusted them for some time. They were interlined in several places. And the interlinings seemed to be writ in a different hand from that in which the papers were writ.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time.

To Interli'nk. v. a. [inter and link.] To connect chains one to another; to join one in another.

The fair mixture in pictures causes us to enter into the subject which it imitates, and imprints it the more deeply into our imagination and our memory: these are two chains which are interlinked, which contain, and are at the same time contained. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Interloca'tion.* n. s. [interlocation, Fr. inter and locatio, Lat.] An interplacing; an interposition.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Your eclipse of the sun is caused by an interlocation of the moon betwixt the earth and the sun.
D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

INTERLOCU'TION.† n. s. [interlocution, Fr. interlocutio, Lat.]

1. Dialogue; interchange of speech.

The plainest and the most intelligible rehearsal of the psalms they savour not, because it is done by interlocution, and with a mutual return of sentences from side to side. Hooker.

A good continued speech, without a good speech of interlocution, shews slowness. Bacon, Ess. Of Discourse.

Contriving this method—by way of dialogue or interlocution betwixt everie tragedie. Niccols, Mir. for Mag. Pref. (1610.)

One shall learn besides there not to interrupt one in the relation of his tale, or to feed it with odd interlocutions.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 193.

A speech broken off by interlocutions, and instilled by parts, penetrates deeper than that which is continued.
Patrick on Proverbs, xxix. 11.

2. Preparatory proceeding in law; an intermediate act before final decision.

These things are called accidental, because some new incident in judicature may emerge upon them, on which the judge ought to proceed by interlocution. Ayliffe, Parergon.

INTERLO'CUTOR.† n. s. [inter and loquor, Lat.] Dialogist; one that talks with another.

Six persons, who were all, save one, interlocutors in the dialogue. Harington, Metamorph. of Ajax, (1596.)

The interlocutors in that dialogue make it their business to cast scorn. Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 168.

The interlocutors in this dialogue are Socrates, and one Minos an Athenian, his acquaintance. Bentley, Dissert. on Phalaris.

Some morose readers shall find fault with my having made the interlocutors compliment with one another. Boyle.

INTERLO'CUTORY.† adj. [interlocutoire, Fr. inter and loquor, Lat.]

1. Consisting of dialogue.

When the minister by exhortation raiseth them up, and the people by protestation of their readiness declare he speaketh not in vain unto them; these interlocutory forms of speech, what are they else but most effectual, partly testifications, and partly inflammations of all piety. Hooker.

There are several interlocutory discourses in the Holy Scriptures, though the persons speaking are not alternately mentioned or referred to. Fiddes, Serm.

2. Preparatory to decision.

That henceforward no inhibition be granted by occasion of any interlocutory decree, — except under the form aforesaid. Const. and Canons Ecclesiast. 97.

The chancellor's decree is either interlocutory or final. Blackstone.

To INTERLO'PE. v. n. [inter and loopen, Dutch, to run.] To run between parties and intercept the advantage that one should gain from the other; to traffick without a proper licence; to forestall; to anticipate irregularly.

The patron is desired to leave off this interloping trade, or admit the knights of the industry to their share. Tatler.

INTERLO'PER.† n. s. [from interlope.] One who runs into business to which he has no right.

Some interloper may perhaps underhand fall upon the work at a lower rate. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. i. C. 5.

When there is a queen, and ladies of honour attending her, there must sometimes be masques, and revels, and interludes. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

The enemies of Socrates hired Aristophanes to personate him on the stage, and, by the insinuations of those interludes, conveyed a hatred of him into the people. Gov. of the Tongue.

Dreams are but interludes, which fancy makes;
When monarch reason sleeps, this mimick wakes. Dryden.

I'NTERLUDER.* n. s. [from interlude.] A performer in an interlude. Not in use.

Is't not a fine sight to see all our children made interluders? B. Jonson, Staple of News.

INTERLU'ENCY. n. s. [interluo, Lat.] Water interposited; interposition of a flood.

Those parts of Asia and America, which are now disjoined by the interluency of the sea, might have been formerly contiguous. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INTERLU'NAR.† } adj. [interlunaire, Fr. Cotgrave;
INTERLU'NARY. } inter and luna, Lat.] Belonging to the time when the moon, about to change, is invisible.

We add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions. Brown.

The sun to me is dark,
And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave. Milton, S. A.

INTERMA'RRIAGE. n. s. [inter and marriage.] Marriage between two families, where each takes one and gives another.

Because the alliances and intermarriages, among so small a people, might obstruct justice, they have a foreigner for judge of St. Marino. Addison on Italy.

To INTERMA'RRY. v. n. [inter and marry.] To marry some of each family with the other.

About the middle of the fourth century, from the building of Rome, it was declared lawful for nobles and plebeians to intermarry. Swift.

I'NTERMEAN.* n. s. [inter and mean.] Something done in the mean time; interact. See INTERACT. At the close of each of the acts of Ben Jonson's Staple of News is an intermean, not indeed of musick, but of interlocutory discourse. Obsolete.

To INTERME'DDLE. v. n. [inter and meddle.] To interpose officiously.

The practice of Spain hath been by war, and by conditions of treaty, to intermeddle with foreign states, and declare themselves protectors general of Catholicks. Bacon.

Seeing the king was a sovereign prince, the emperor should not intermeddle with ordering his subjects, or directing the affairs of his realm. Hayward.

There were no ladies, who disposed themselves to intermeddle in business. Clarendon.

To INTERME'DDLE.† v. a. [entremesler, Fr.] To intermix; to mingle. This is perhaps misprinted for intermelled, Dr. Johnson says; which is not the case; for other good writers, as well as Spenser, (from whom Dr. Johnson cites a solitary example of intermeddle,) employ the word.

Many other adventures are intermedled; — as the love of Britomart, the overthrow of Marinell, the misery of Florimell, &c. Spenser, Lett. Pref. to his Fairy Queen.

To intermeddle retiredness with society, so as one may give sweetness to the other, and both to us! Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

Some keep precisely the order of the book, others intermeddle psalms in metre. Maddox, Vind. of the Ch. of Eng. against Neal, (1733,) p. 155.

INTERME'DDLER. n. s. [from intermeddle.] One that interposes officiously; one that thrusts himself into business to which he has no right.

There's hardly a greater pest to government and families, than officious tale-bearers, and busy intermeddlers. L'Estrange.

Our allies, and our stock-jobbers, direct her majesty not to change her secretary or treasurer, who, for the reasons that these officious intermeddlers demanded their continuance, ought never to have been admitted into the least trust. Swift.

Shall strangers, saucy intermeddlers, say,
Thus far, and thus, are you allow'd to punish? A Philips.

INTERME'DIACY. n. s. [from intermediate.] Interposition: intervention. An unauthorised word.

In birds the auditory nerve is affected by only the intermediacy of the columella. Derham.

INTERME'DIAL. adj. [inter and medius, Lat.] Intervening; lying between; intervenient.

The love of God makes a man temperate in the midst of feasts, and is active enough without any intermedial appetites. Bp. Taylor.

A gardener prepares the ground, and in all the intermedial spaces he is careful to dress it. Evelyn's Kalendar.

INTERME'DIATE. adj. [intermedial, Fr. inter and medius, Lat.] Intervening; interposed; holding the middle place or degree between two extremes.

Do not the most refrangible rays excite the shortest vibrations for making a sensation of a deep violet, the least refrangible the largest for making a sensation of deep red, and the several intermediate sorts of rays, vibrations of several intermediate bignesses, to make sensations of the several intermediate colours. Newton, Opt.

An animal consists of solid and fluid parts, unless one should reckon some of an intermediate nature as fat and phlegm. Arbuthnot.

The general natures, which stand between the nearest and most remote, are called intermediate. Watts.

To INTERME'DIATE.* v. n. [from the adjective.] To intervene; to interpose.

The tyranny of his [the sun's] fierce beams reigning here uncontrouled by those intermediating accidents, which conspire to the felicity of other regions. Sir H. Sheeres, in Ld. Halifax's Misc. p. 11.

INTERME'DIATELY. adv. [from intermediate.] By way of intervention.

To INTERME'LL.* v. n. [entremesler, Fr.] To intermeddle. Obsolete.

To — boldly intermell
With holy things. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1598.)

To INTERME'LL.† v. a. [entremesler, Fr.] To mix; to mingle. Not in use. Dr. Johnson has corrupted the passage of Spenser, in which intermeddle occurs, to suit his purpose here. Spenser's word is not intermell. See the verb active INTERMEDDLE.

The lyfe of this wretched world is alway intermelled with moche bitterness. Bp. Fisher, Ps.

INTE'RMENT.† n. s. [interment, Fr. from inter.] Burial; sepulture.

Here in England the interments of the dead were anciently farre out of all townes or cities. Weever, Fun. Mon.

In the noble church of the Grey Friars in London, — four queens, besides upwards of six hundred persons of quality, were buried. These interments imported considerable sums of money into the mendicant societies. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 291.

There is scarce any grievance or complaint come before us in this place, wherein we do not find him intermentioned. Harbottle Grimstone, Speech in the H. of Com. against Abp. Laud.

INTERMIGRA'TION. n. s. [intermigration, Fr. inter and migro, Lat.] Act of removing from one place to another, so as that of two parties removing, each takes the place of the other.

Men have a strange variety in colour, stature, and humour; and all arising from the climate, though the continent be but one, as to point of access, mutual intercourse, and possibility of intermigrations. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

INTE'RMINABLE.† adj. [interminable, Fr. in and termino, Latin.] Immense; admitting no boundary.

Eternitie then is perfite possession and altogether of life interminable. Chaucer, Boeth. v. pros. 6.

O radiant luminary of light interminable! Skelton, Poems, p. 121.

An interminable seizure by satan both in soul and body. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

As from the face of heaven the shatter'd clouds
Tumultuous rove, the interminable sky
Sublimer swells, and o'er the world expands
A purer azure. Thomson, Summer.

INTE'RMINABLE.* n. s. He, whom no bound or limit can confine; an appellation of the Godhead, like that of Eternal, and finely employed by Milton to denote the divine immensity. Dr. Johnson has cited the following passage as a solitary illustration of the adjective, which the examples prove to be no uncommon word; and here it is, emphatically, a substantive.

As if they would confine the Interminable,
And tie him to his own prescript,
Who made our laws to bind us, not himself. Milton, S. A.

INTE'RMINATE. adj. [interminate, Fr. interminatus, Lat.] Unbounded; unlimited.

Within a thicket I repos'd; when round
I ruffled up fall'n leaves in heaps, and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman, Odyss.

To INTE'RMINATE.* v. a. [intermino, Lat.] To threaten; to menace. Bullokar.

Enough, enough of these interminated judgements, wherewith, if I would follow the steps of the prophets, I might strike your hearts with just horrour. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 163.

INTERMINA'TION.† n. s. [intermination, Fr. intermino, Lat.] Menace; threat.

The terrours of the law were the intermination of curses upon all those, that ever broke any of the least commandments. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 5. s. 3.

The threats and interminations of the Gospel, those terrors of the Lord, as goads, may drive those brutish creatures who will not be attracted. Decay of Chr. Piety.

To INTERMI'NGLE. v. a. [inter and mingle.] To mingle; to mix; to put some things amongst others.

The church in her liturgies hath intermingled, with readings out of the New Testament, lessons taken out of the law and prophets. Hooker.

His church he compareth unto a field, where tares, manifestly known and seen by all men, do grow intermingled with good corn. Hooker.

My lord shall never rest:
I'll intermingle every thing he does
With Cassio's suit. Shakspeare, Othello.

Here sailing ships delight the wandering eyes:
There trees and intermingled temples rise. Pope.

To INTERMI'NGLE.† v. n. To be mixed or incorporated.

They will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Party and faction will intermingle. Swift.

INTERMI'SSION. n. s. [intermission, Fr. intermissio, Lat.]

1. Cessation for a time; pause; intermediate stop.

Came a reeking post,
Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission,
Which presently they read. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I count intermission almost the same thing as change; for that, that hath been intermitted, is after a sort new. Bacon.

The water ascends gently, and by intermissions; but it falls continuately, and with force. Wilkins, Dædalus.

The peasants work on, in the hottest part of the day, without intermission. Locke.

2. Intervenient time.

But, gentle heaven,
Cut short all intermission: front to front,
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. State of being intermitted.

Words borrowed of antiquity, have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace-like newness. B. Jonson.

4. The space between the paroxysms of a fever, or any fits of pain; rest; pause of sorrow.

Rest or intermission none I find. Milton, S. A.

INTERMI'SSIVE. adj. [from intermit.] Coming by fits; not continual.

I reduced Ireland, after so many intermissive wars, to a perfect passive obedience. Howell, Engl. Tears.

As though there were any feriation in nature, or justitiums imaginable in professions, whose subject is under no intermissive but constant way of mutation, this season is commonly termed the physicians' vacation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To INTERMI'T. v. a. [intermitto, Lat.] To forbear any thing for a time; to interrupt.

If nature should intermit her course, and leave altogether, though it were but for a-while, the observation of her own laws. Hooker.

I'NTERVIEW. n. s. [entrevue, French.] Mutual sight; sight of each other. It is commonly used for a formal, appointed, or important meeting or conference.

The day will come when the passions of former enmity being allayed, we shall with ten times redoubled tokens of reconciled love shew ourselves each towards other the same, which Joseph and the brethren of Joseph were at the time of their interview in Egypt. Hooker.

His fears were, that the interview betwixt
England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Such happy interview and fair event
Of love and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flowers,
And charming symphonies attach'd the heart
Of Adam. Milton, P. L.

To INTERVO'LVE. v. a. [intervolvo, Latin.] To involve one within another.

Mystical dance! which yonder starry sphere
Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels
Resembles nearest; mazes intricate,
Eccentrick, intervolv'd, yet regular,
Then most, when most irregular they seem. Milton, P. L.

To INTERWE'AVE.† v. a. preter. interwove, part. pass. interwoven, interwove, or interweaved. [inter and weave.] To mix one with another in a regular texture: to intermingle.

Come on, come on: and, where you go,
So interweave the curious knot,
As ev'n the observer scarce may know
Which lines are Pleasure's, and which not.
B. Jonson, Masques.

Prayer — is of a soft and sociable nature, and it can incorporate and sink into our business like water into ashes, and never increase the bulk of them: it can mix and interweave itself with all our cares, without any hindrance unto them; nay, it is a great strength and improvement unto them. Hales, Rem. p. 141.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton, Comus.

At last,
Words interwove with sighs found out their way. Milton, P. L.

Then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven. Milton, P. R.

None
Can say here nature ends and art begins;
But mixt like the elements, and born like twins,
So interweav'd, so like, so much the same;
None this mere nature, that mere art can name. Denham.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,
Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,
And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryden

He so interweaves truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us. Dryden.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them. Addison.

Orchard and flower-garden lie so mixt and interwoven with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness. Spectator.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being re-united with himself. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of Scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.

INTERWE'AVING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Intertexture.

What interweavings or interworkings can knit the minister and the magistrate in their several functions? Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

To INTERWI'SH. v. a. [inter and wish.] To wish mutually to each other

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,
What tyrants and their subjects interwish, ——
Fall on that man! Donne, Poems, p. 34.

INTERWO'RKING.* n. s. [inter and work.] Act of working together. Not in use. But see Milton's employment of it under interweaving.

INTERWRE'ATHED.* part. adj. [inter and wreath.] Woven in a wreath.

Say happy youth, crown'd with a heavenly ray
Of the first flame, and interwreathed bay,
Inform my soul, &c. Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 67.

INTE'STABLE. adj. [intestabilis, Latin.] Disqualified to make a will.

INTE'STACY.* n. s. [from intestate.] Want of a will.

INTE'STATE. adj. [intestat, Fr. intestatus, Latin.] Wanting a will; dying without a will.

Why should calamity be full of words?
— Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy succeeders of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakspeare.

Present punishment pursues his maw,
When surfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, intestate death. Dryden, Juv.

INTESTI'NAL. adj. [intestinal, Fr. from intestine.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the intestinal tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder. Arbuthnot.

INTE'STINE. adj. [intestin, Fr. intestinus, Latin.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our distempered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us. Duppa.

Intestine war no more our passions wage,
Ev'n giddy factions hear away their rage. Pope.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, colick pangs,
And moon-struck madness. Milton, P. L.

A wooden jack, which had almost
Lost, by disuse, the art to roast,
A sudden alteration feels,
Increas'd by new intestine wheels. Swift.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakspeare: perhaps for mortal and intestine should be read mortal internecine.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shakspeare.

But God, or nature, while they thus contend,
To these intestine discords put an end. Dryden, Ovid.

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

INTE'STINE.† n. s. [intestinum, Lat. intestine, Fr. The word is of no great age in our language. Bishop Reynolds, in his Treatise on the Passions, 1650, uses the Latin intestina for intestines, chap. 16.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To INTHI'RST.* v. a. [in and thirst.] To make thirsty.

Using our pleasure, as the traveller doth water, not as the drunkard wine, whereby he is inflamed and inthirsted the more. Bp. Hall, Christian Moderation, § 8.

To INTHRA'L. v. a. [in and thrall.] To enslave; to shackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

What though I be inthrall'd, he seems a knight,
And will not any way dishonour me. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The Turk has sought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and inthralled. Ralegh.

Authors to themselves in all
Both what they judge, and what they choose; for so
I form'd them free, and free they must remain
Till they enthral themselves. Milton, P. L.

She soothes, but never can inthral my mind:
Why may not peace and love for once be join'd? Prior.

INTHRA'LMENT. n. s. [from inthral.] Servitude; slavery.

Moses and Aaron, sent from God to claim
His people from inthralment, they return
With glory and spoil back to their promis'd land. Milton, P. L.

Adrian the fourth, called, before his inthronization, Nicholas Breakspeare. Weever, Funer. Mon.

The future fortunes of the church, from its humble cradle to its inthronization in glory, are foretold to St. John. Warburton, Serm. xx.

To INTI'CE.* See To ENTICE, and its derivatives.

I'NTIMACY. n. s. [from intimate.] Close familiarity.

It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers.

I'NTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Latin.]

1. Inmost; inward; intestine.

They knew not
That what I mention'd was of God, I knew
From intimate impulse. Milton, S. A.

Fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson.

2. Near; not kept at distance.

Moses was with him in the retirements of the Mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South.

3. Familiar; closely acquainted.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.

I'NTIMATE. n. s. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French: intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. of the Tongue.

To I'NTIMATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To partake of mutually; to share together as friends. Obsolete.

So both conspiring gan to intimate
Each other's griefe with zeale affectionate. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 12.

To I'NTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Lat.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.

The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison, Cato.

I'NTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]

1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.

The same œconomy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbuthnot.

2. Nearly; inseparably.

Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us and more intimately united with us. Addison, Spect.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.

INTIMA'TION. n. s. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart. South.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.

I'NTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mass; not being external, or on the surface; internal. Not used.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Bodies.

To INTI'MIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to dastardize; to make cowardly.

At that tribunal stands the writing tribe,
Which nothing can intimidate or bribe;
Time is the judge. Young.

Guilt, once harbour'd in the conscious breast,
Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.

INTIMIDA'TION.* n. s. [intimidation, Fr. Cotgrave.] Act of intimidating.

INTI'RE. n. s. [integer, Lat. entier, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; broken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politick societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.

INTI'RENESS. n. s. [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same:
You this intireness better may fulfil,
Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.

To INTI'TLE.* v. a. [intituler, old French.] To give a title or discriminative name; now usually written entitle; formerly not so. "Is intituled.— To intitle one's name on a booke." Barret's Alv. 1580. See To ENTITLE.

I'NTO.† prep. [Sax. ınto; in and to. This word was formerly often used for unto, and was not laid aside in Shakspeare's time.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place: opposed to out of.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Noting entrance of one thing into another.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the side it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature? Wotton.

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

3. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act. Pope.

4. Noting inclusion real or figurative.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon.

5. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

Compound bodies my be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

A man must sin himself into a love of other men's sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
When the mad people rise against the state,
To look them into duty; and command
An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden, Persius.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison on Italy.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTO'LERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable, Fr.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Bp. Taylor.

His awful presence did the croud surprize,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode,
Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broome.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTO'LERABLENESS. n. s. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTO'LERANCE.* n. s. [intolerance, Fr.] Want of toleration; want of patience and candour to bear the opinions of others.

And you, my lord, is it you of all men living, that stand forth to accuse another of intolerance of opinions! Lowth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 62.

These few restrictions, I hope, are no great stretches of intolerance, no very violent exertions of despotism. Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

INTO'LERANT.† adj. [intolerant, Fr.]

1. Not enduring; not able to endure.

Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbuthnot.

2. Not favourable to toleration.

Why, then, am I branded as an intolerant zealot? Lowth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 62.

INTO'LERANT.* n. s. One who is not favourable to toleration.

You might as well have concluded, that I was a Jew, or a Mahometan, as an intolerant and a persecutor. Lowth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 62.

INTO'LERATED.* part. adj. [in and tolerate.] Not endured; denied toleration.

I would have all intoleration intolerated in its turn. Ld. Chesterfield.

INTOLERA'TION.* n. s. [in and toleration.] Want of toleration.

This noise against the Jew bill proceeds from that narrow mob-spirit of intoleration in religious, and inhospitality in civil matters, which all wise governments should oppose. Ld. Chesterfield.

To INTO'MB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To inclose in a funeral monument; to bury.

What commandment had the Jews for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom, notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intombed? Hooker.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb? Shakspeare.

Mighty heroes' more majestick shades,
And youths intomb'd before their fathers' eyes. Dryden.

To I'NTONATE.† v. a. [intono, Lat.]

1. To thunder. Dict.

2. To sing together; to sing loudly.

As after a partial, though great and adorable accomplishment of the divine economy, our Saviour once, upon a famous and well-known hour, pronounced τετέλεσται, "it is finished;" so, then, the great τετέλεσται shall be intonated by the general voice of the whole host of heaven. Harris on the 53d Chap. of Isaiah, (1739,) p. 262

INTONA'TION.† n. s. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.]

1. The act of thundering. Dict.

2. Chant; the act of singing together.

Whether poetry or prose were in question, one slow and uniform intonation, consisting of notes of equal or nearly equal length, was exclusively adopted. Mason on Church Musick, p. 28.

These were all sung, not merely in simple intonation or chaunt, but in this mode of figurate descant. Mason on Church Musick, p. 90.

To INTO'NE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from tone; intonner, Fr.] To make a slow protracted noise.

So swells each wind-pipe; ass intones to ass
Harmonick twang. Pope, Dunciad.

To INTO'RT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbuthnot.

With reverent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round the intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To INTO'XICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate: to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton, P. L.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease to infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equalled, if not exceeded, by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Chr. Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot.

INTO'XICATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Inebriated.

Our inward eyes be nothing bright,
While in this muddy world incarcerate
They lie, and with blind passions be intoxicate.
More, Sleep of the Soul, iii. 10.

Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself,
Crude or intoxicate, collecting toys. Milton, P. R.

INTOXICA'TION. n. s. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRACTABI'LITY.* n. s. [from intractable.] Ungovernableness.

The other conceding to the prejudices, the wrongheadedness, the intractability of those, with whom it has to deal.
Paley, View of the Evid. of the Chr. Rel. vol. ii. P. ii. ch. 2.

INTRA'CTABLE. adj. [intractabilis, Lat. intractable, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

INTRA'CTABLENESS. n. s. [from intractable.] Obstinacy; perverseness.

INTRA'CTABLY. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

To INTRA'NCE.* See To ENTRANCE.

INTRANQUI'LLITY.† n. s. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

He lived not far from Westminster-abby, within hearing of the choir, which perhaps did not a little contribute to his intranquillity!
Political Death of Tom Whig, Esq. P. i. (1710,) p. 3.

INTRA'NSIENT.* adj. [in and transient.] That passeth not away.

An unchangeable, an intransient, indefeasible priesthood.
Killingbeck, Serm. p. 93.

INTRA'NSITIVE.† adj. [intransitivus, Lat.] In grammar, a verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run.
Clarke's Latin Grammar.

The occasion of such difference is from a question of grammar, whether the verb be in signification intransitive or transitive. Pococke on Hosea, p. 47.

INTRA'NSITIVELY.* adv. [from intransitive.] According to the nature of an intransitive verb.

Yet again it [the verb] is manifestly, in the same form, used intransitively. Pococke on Hosea, p. 48.

The difference between verbs absolutely neuter, and intransitively active, is not always clear. Lowth, Eng. Gram.

INTRANSMU'TABLE. adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus.
Ray on the Creation.

To INTRA'P.* See To ENTRAP.

To INTRE'ASURE.† v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings lie intreasured. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

So he [the jeweller] entreasures princes' cabinets,
As thy wealth will their wished libraries.
Chapman on B. Jonson's Sejanus.

To INTRE'AT.* See To ENTREAT, and its derivatives.

INTRE'ATFUL.* adj. [from intreat.] Full of entreaty.

Humble prayers and intreatfull teares. Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 6.

To INTRE'NCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another: with on.

Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences.
King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

To INTRE'NCH.† v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

It was this very sword intrenched it. Shakspeare, All's Well.

Those who care not whose living faces they intrench with their petulant styles. B. Jonson, Dedic. of the Fox.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton, P. L.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

The English, in the suburbs close intrench'd.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

INTRE'NCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakspeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hanmer. I believe Shakspeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakspeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

INTRE'NCHMENT. n. s. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTRE'PID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson

INTREPI'DITY. n. s. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

INTRE'PIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

I'NTRICABLE.* adj. [from intricate.] Entangling; ensnaring.

They shall remain captive, and entangled in the amorous intricable net. Shelton, D. Quix. iii. 7.

I'NTRICACY. n. s. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

I'NTRICATE.† adj. [entricate, old French, interwoven; intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To I'NTRICATE.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Camden. Few words have been more in use, or can boast better authority.

Alterations of sirnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

However the matter may be intricated by passing through many, perhaps unknowing, hands.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 6.

Manifold, intricated and distracted divisions amongst men touching Free Will. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 76.

Thus shall your majesty restore me both to the freedom of my thoughts, and of my life; otherwise so intricated that I know not how to unfold it.
Sir H. Wotton to the King, (1628,) Rem. p. 564.

The more I strive to unwind
Myself from this meander, I the more
Therein am intricated.
Heywood and Broome's Com. of Lancashire Witches.

That will be to intricate the business.
Ld. Ch. Just. Pemberton, Trial of Ld. Grey, (1682.)

I'NTRICATELY.† adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

It is too intricately involved for me so much as to guess at any particulars. Wotton, Rem. p. 457.

The mortal steel past by, leaving his breast
Untouch'd, and in his coat of skins did rest,
Into the which, I know not how, 'twas wove
So intricately, that Mirtillo strove
In vain to pull it out. Fanshaw, Tr. of Pastor Fido.

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

I'NTRICATENESS. n. s. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRICA'TION.* n. s. [intrication, Fr.] An entanglement; snare; labyrinth; maze; involution. Not in use. Cotgrave.

INTRI'GUE.† n. s. [intrigue, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius and Lye both deduce it from the Goth. triggua, an agreement, a compact. Iceland. trigd; Ital. tregua; low Lat. treuga; Germ. treuga; old English, treague. Others think that it comes from the Latin intricare, to perplex; whence the old French substantive intrique, which afterwards became intrigue. " On dit intrigue, et non pas intrique." Richelet, Dict. Franç. 1685. Serenius, however, says, that the original good meaning of the northern word passed into an evil one. Yet we certainly use intrigue in the sense of to intricate, though it has hitherto been unnoticed. See the verb active To INTRIGUE.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison, Guardian.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRI'GUE.† v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

The intriguing and determined genius of Cromwell was forced to bow down to it.
Brand, Ess. on Political Associations, p. 127.

To INTRI'GUE.* v. a. [intrico, Lat. from the noun.] To perplex; to render intricate.

Great discursists were apt to intrigue affairs, dispute the prince's resolutions, and stir up the people.
L. Addison, W. Barbary, Pref. (1671.)

How doth it [sin] perplex and intrigue the whole course of your lives, and entangle ye in a labyrinth of knavish tricks and collusions. Scott, Christian Life, i. 4.

INTRI'GUER.† n. s. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

That club of intriguers who assemble at the Feuillans, and whose cabinet meets at Madame Stahl's, and makes and directs all the ministers, is the real executive government of France.
Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs, (1791.)

INTRI'GUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRI'NSECAL.† adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, Fr. This word is now generally written intrinsical, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

There are sins of a contagious nature, apt to diffuse their venom to others; as there are other some, whose evil is intrinsical to the owner. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham,—who dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

Far off to us, to thee near; yea, intrinsecal.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

INTRI'NSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lie is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again: nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRI'NSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsick; this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis tried,
The more shall its intrinsick worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsick value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

INTRI'NSECATE.† adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Shakspeare. Ben Jonson uses it, evidently in ridicule or contempt.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intrinsecate t' unloose. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate
Of life at once untie. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

There are certainly puntilios, or (as I may more nakedly insinuate them) certain intrinsecate strokes and wards, to which your activity is not yet amounted. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To INTRODU'CE. v. a. [introduco, Lat. introduire, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar errour whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An author who should introduce a sport of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it. Layer's Trial.

INTRODU'CER. n. s. [introducteur, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODU'CTION.† n. s. [introduction, Fr. introductio, Lat.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

I will bring thee where thou soon shalt quit
Those rudiments, and see before thine eyes
The monarchies of the earth, their pomp and state,
Sufficient introduction to inform
Thee, of thyself so apt, in regal arts. Milton, P. R.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODU'CTIVE. adj. [introductif, Fr. from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logick; that great instrumental introductive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODU'CTOR.* n. s. [introducteur, Fr.] One who introduces another to a person or place.

No formality was necessary in addressing Madam Prune, and therefore Leviculus went next morning without an introductor.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 182.

INTRODU'CTORY. adj. [from introductus, Lat.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRE'SSION. n. s. [introgressio, Lat.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTRO'IT.† n. s. [introite, old Fr.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of publick devotions, Dr. Johnson says, which is not accurate. "In the first Common Prayer Book of K. Edward VI. before every collect, epistle, and gospel, there is a psalm printed, which contains something prophetical of the evangelical history used upon each Sunday and holyday, or in some way or other proper to the day: which, from its being sung or said, whilst the priest made his entrance within the rails of the altar, was called introitus, or introit." Wheatly on the Com. Pr. Ch. v. § viii.

When the exhortacion is ended, then shall be song for the introite to the communion this psalme.
Form of Orderyng for Priestes, 1549, D. iii.

INTROMI'SSION.† n. s. [intromissio, Lat.]

1. The act of sending in.

If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacham on Drawing.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. Admission.

The soft fine yielding Æther gives admission:
So gentle Venus to Mercurius dares
Descend, and finds an easy intromission.
More, Song of the Soul, iii. iii. 48.

It is worth inquiry, whether the intromission of venial sins, without which no man lives, does hinder the fruit of the indulgence; for if it does, all the cost is lost! Bp. Taylor, Dissuas. from Popery, ii. § 4.

3. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects; as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

To INTROMI'T.† v. a. [intromitto, Lat.]

1. To send in; to let in; to admit.

This bird [the ibis] has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intromitted into the anus, to inject salt water, as with a syringe, into its own bowels. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 232.

2. To allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

It intromits more cases and scruples than it can resolve. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ii. § 2.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton, Opticks.

To INTROMI'T.* v. n. To intermeddle with the effects of another. See INTROMISSION.

They took her a prisoner, — possessed themselves of her mint, intromitted with her gold and silver, and put the crown upon the head of her son. Stuart, Hist. of Scotland, i. 318.

INTRORECE'PTION.* n. s. [intro and receptio, Lat.] The act of admitting into or within.

Were but the love of Christ to us ever suffered to come into our hearts, as species to the eye by introreception; had we but come to the least taste and relish of it; what would we not do to recompense, and answer, and entertain that love! Hammond, Works, iv. 564.

To INTROSPE'CT. v. a. [introspectus, Lat.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPE'CTION. n. s. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

To INTROSU'ME.* v. a. [intro and sumo, Lat.] To suck in.

How they elect, then introsume their proper food. Evelyn, iv. § 21.

INTROSUSCE'PTION.* n. s. [intro, Lat. and susception.] The act of taking in.

The parts of the body are either animate or inanimate; either such as participate of the life of the whole, and are nourished by the introsusception of enlivened aliment, &c. Smith on Old Age, p. 160.

INTROVE'NIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Lat.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown, Vulg. Err.

INTROVE'RSION.* n. s. [intro, Lat. and version.] The act of introverting.

A man of science who discovered it not by a tiresome introversion of his faculties. Bp. Berkeley, Minute Philosopher, ii. 34. edit. 1732.

To INTROVE'RT.* v. a. [intro and verto, Lat.] To turn inwards.

His awkward gait, his introverted toes,
Bent knees, round shoulders. Cowper, Task, B. 4.

"gaged, gave" To INTRU'DE. v. n. [intrudo, Lat.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd. Shakspeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship
Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late
To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

3. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Col. ii. 18.

To INTRU'DE.† v. a.

1. To force without right or welcome; commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

2. To force in; to cast in.

If it [a clyster] should be intruded up by force, it cannot so quickly penetrate to the superior parts. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 273.

INTRU'DER. n. s. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shakspeare.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies on Ireland.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Addison, Freeholder.

INTRU'SION. n. s. [intrusion, Fr. intrusio, Lat.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakspeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion. Milton, P. L.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?
Were not my orders that I should be private? Addison, Cato.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations. Wake, Prep. for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton.

INTRU'SIVE.* adj. [from intrusion.] Intruding upon; entering without welcome.

Let me shake off the intrusive cares of day,
And lay the meddling senses all aside. Thomson, Winter.

To INTRU'ST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value: as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the pow'rs above. Dryden, Juv.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addison, Cato.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbuthnot.

INTUI'TION. n. s. [intuitus, intueor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing; used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. Gov. of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is insensible. Glanville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTU'ITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Lat. intuitif, Fr.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgement, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives
Discursive or intuitive. Milton, P. L.

INTU'ITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, Fr.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUME'SCENCE. } n. s. [intumescence, Fr. intumesco,
INTUME'SCENCY. } Lat.] Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescences. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake. Woodward.

INTU'MULATED.* adj. [intumulatus, Latin.] Unburied. Cockeram.

INTURGE'SCENCE. n. s. [in and turgesco, Lat.]. Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I'NTUSE. n. s. [intusus, Lat.] . Bruise.

The flesh therewith she suppled and did steepe,
To abate all spasm and soke the swelling bruze;
And, after having scarcht the intuse deepe,
She with her scarf did bind the wound. Spenser, F. Q.

To INTWI'NE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist, or wreath together.

This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hooker.

2. To be inserted by being wreathed or twisted.

The vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine. Dryden.

To INVA'DE.† v. a. [invado, Lat.]

1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance.

He will invade them with his troops. Habak. iii. 16.

With dangerous expedition they invade
Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton, P. L.

Thy race in times to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden, Æn.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdras.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm
Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

4. [A latinism.] To go into. Obsolete.

That same his sea-marke made
And nam'd it Albion; but later day
Finding in it fit ports for fisher's trade,
Gan more the same frequent and farther to invade. Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 6.

All things from thence doe their first being fetch,
And borrow matter, whereof they are made;
Which, when as forme and feature it does ketch,
Becomes a body, and doth then invade
The state of life out of the griesly shade. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 37.

INVA'DER. n. s. [from invado, Lat.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid
Against invaders. Milton, P. L.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Were he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham, Sophy.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgement with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALE'SCENCE. n. s. [invalesco, Lat.] Strength; health; force. Dict.

INVALETU'DINARY.* adj. [in and valetudinary.] Wanting health; infirm.

Whether usually the most studious, laborious ministers be not the most invaletudinary and infirm? Papers betw. the Comm. for Review of the Liturgy, 1661, p. 127.

INVA'LID. adj. [invalide, Fr. invalidus, Lat.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,
Admitting motion in the heavens, to shew
Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton, P. L.

INVALI'D.* n. s. See INVALIDE. It is now usually written invalid.

To INVA'LIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alledged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALIDA'TION.* n. s. [from To invalidate.] Act of weakening.

Magna Charta —— the inestimable monument of English freedom, so long the boast and glory of this nation, would have been at once an instrument of our servitude and a monument of our folly, if this principle were true: the thirty-four confirmations would have been only so many repetitions of their absurdity, so many new links in the chain, and so many invalidations of their right. Burke, Speech on Libels, (1771.)

INVALI'DE. n. s. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,
With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,
Wish'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALI'DITY. n. s. [in and validity; invaladité, Fr.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.

2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

INVA'LUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith produced by terrour would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. Atterbury.

INVA'LUABLY* adv. [from invaluable.] Inestimably.

That invaluably precious blood of the Son of God. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 257.

INVA'RIABLE. adj. [in and variatus, Lat. invariabile, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. Brown.

The rule of good and evil would not appear uniform and invariable, but different, according to men's different complexions and inclinations. Atterbury.

INVA'RIABLENESS.† n. s. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

From the dignity of their intellect arises the invariableness of their wills. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 32.

These nominatives — emphatically represent and express the everlasting veracity and invariableness of God. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 102.

INVA'RIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him. Atterbury.

INVA'RIED.* adj. [in and variatus, Lat.] Not varying.

Change of the particles, or the lesser invaried words, that add to the signification of nouns and verbs. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 136.

INVA'SION. n. s. [invasion, Fr. invasio, Lat.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sam. xxx.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of the Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden, Æn.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time till now, for one intire length of time, it shew at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbuthnot.

INVA'SIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gasping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the desarts that their swords had made. Arbuthnot.

INVE'CTION.* n. s. [invectio, Lat.] Reproachful accusation; railing; invective.

Many men wish Luther to have used a more temperate style sometimes, especially against princes and temporal estates; and he himself did openly acknowledge his fault therein, especially his immoderate invection against King Henry the 8th. Fulke, Answ. to P. Frarine, (1586,) p. 28.

INVE'CTIVE. n. s. [invective, Fr. invectiva, low Lat.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hooker.

If we take satire, in the general signification of the world, for an invective, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryden, Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So desp'rate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Casting off respect, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invectives we make at their supposed errours, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Inve'ctive. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invective muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

Inve'ctively. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invectively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we
Are mere usurpers, tyrants. Shakspeare.

To INVE'IGH. v. a. [inveho, Lat.] To utter censure or reproach: with against.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies. Arbuthnot.

Inve'igher.† n. s. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

Ill-temper'd and extravagant invectives against Papists, made by men whose persons wanting authority as much as their speeches do reason, do nothing else but set an edge upon our adversaries' sword; whilst the light behaviour, and bad example of the inveigher's life infuseth courage to their hearts, and addeth strength unto their arms. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 780.

One of these inveighers against mercury, in seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wiseman.

To INVE'IGLE.† v. a. [invogliare, Ital. Minsheu; aveugler, or enaveugler, Fr. Skinner and Junius; wiegeln, Germ. from the Goth. wagian, to excite, to move. Serenius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Most false Duessa, royal richly dight,
That easy was to inveigle weaker sight,
Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might.
Spenser, F. Q.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Shakspeare.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite the unwary sense
Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Milton, P. R.

Both right able
To inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spectator.

Inve'iglement.* n. s. [from To inveigle.] Allurement; seduction.

The inveiglements of the world, and the frailty of his own nature. South, Serm. vi. 152.

Inve'igler.† n. s. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Persons lewd there were,
Which counsell'd oft my son's embracing vice;
As still is seene, in Court enveiglers are.
Mir. for Mag. p. 165.

Being presented to the emperour for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Sandys.

Inve'iled.* part. adj. [from in and veil.] Covered, as with a veil.

Her eyes invayl'd with sorrowe's clouds
Scarce see the light;
Disdain hath wrapt her in the shrowds
Of loathed night. W. Browne.

Inue'ndo.* See Innuendo. It is sometimes corruptly written inuendo.

To Inve'nom. See To Envenom.

To INVE'NT. v. a. [inventer, Fr. invenio, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

By their count, which lovers' books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spenser, F. Q.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none
She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment.
Spenser, F. Q.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton, P. L.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who Nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.

The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arbuthnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Susan. ver. 43.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave. Shakspeare.

Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawnings of philosophy. Addison, Spect.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spenser, F. Q.

Inve'nter. n. s. [from inventeur, French.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garth.

2. A forger.

Inve'ntful.* adj. [invent and full.] Full of invention.

The genius of the French government appears powerful only in destruction, and inventful only in oppression.
Gifford, Rem. prefix. to a Residence in France, (1797.)

Inve'ntible.* adj. [from invent.] Discoverable; capable of being found out.

When first I gave my thoughts to make guns shoot often, I thought there had been but one only exquisite way inventible.
Marquis of Worcester, Cent. of Invent. 67.

Inve'ntion. n. s. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shakspeare, Hen. V. Prol.

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgement more. Roscommon.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre;
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgement, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales. Ray on the Creation.

3. Forgery; fiction.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

If thou can'st accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

5. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton, P. L.

INVE'NTIVE. adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance: ready at expedients.

Those have the inventivest heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle slew. Dryden.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Ralegh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

INVE'NTOR. n. s. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventer.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker. Milton, P. L.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook,
Fall'n on the inventor's heads. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

INVENTO'RIALLY. adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I'NVENTORY. n. s. [inventaire, French; inventarium, Latin.] An account or catalogue of movables.

I found,
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Whoe'er looks,
For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew, Mus.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to toss half a dozen women into the bargain. Addison, Spect.

To I'NVENTORY. v. a. [inventorier, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd. Shakspeare.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Gov. of the Tongue.

INVE'NTRESS.† n. s. [inventrice, Fr. from inventor.] A female that invents.

Povertye hath been the inventrice of all good craftes. Remedy for Sedition, (1536,) F. ii. b.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVE'RSE. adj. [inverse, Fr. inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVE'RSION. n. s. [inversion, Fr. inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed amongst the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.

To INVE'RT. v. a. [inverto, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn! Waller.

Ask not the cause why sullen Spring
So long delays her flowers to bear,
And Winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to embezzle. Instead of this convert or intervert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

INVE'RTEDLY.† adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Let the divine part be upward, and the region of beast below; otherwise, 'tis but to live invertedly, and with thy head unto the heels of thy antipodes. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 14.

Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landskip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham, Phys. Theol.

To INVE'ST.† v. a. [investir, Fr. investio, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

How long a day soever Thou make that day in the grave, yet there is no day between that and the resurrection. Then we shall all be invested, reapparelled, in our own bodies. Donne, Devot. (1625,) p. 358.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe. Sandys, Job, p. 26.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters. Milton, P. L.
Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham, Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarendon.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace; as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must,
Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong atchieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakspeare.
Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty
Invests him coming. Milton, P. L.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

6. To put on.

Alas for pittie, that so faire a crew,
As like cannot be seen from East to West,
Cannot find one this girdle to invest. Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 18.

INVE'STIENT. adj. [investiens, Lat.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plasms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVE'STIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

To INVE'STIGATE. v. a. [investigo, Lat.] To search out: to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Holder on Speech.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

INVESTIGA'TION.† n. s. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Lat. The word is of no great age either in the French or our own language. Rousseau considers himself as the introducer of it into French use. The original meaning of investigatio is the searching out by the tracks of the feet, in and vestigia; a phrase of hunting.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought
Investigation calm, whose silent powers
Command the world. Thomson, Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope to Swift.

INVE'STIGATIVE.* adj. [from investigate.] Curious and deliberate in making inquiry.

When money was in his pocket, he was more deliberate and investigative. Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Lang.

INVE'STIGATOR.* n. s. [investigator, Lat.] One who diligently searches out.

This occult piece of history — I leave to the curiosity, and conjectures of some more laborious investigator. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 47.

INVE'STITURE.† n. s. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Ralegh, Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.

Thy redemption is sealed in heaven, and shall in due time be manifested to thine investiture with the eternal glory and happiness which God hath prepared for all his. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 139.

INVE'STIVE.* adj. [from invest.] Encircling; enclosing.

The horrid fire, all mercilesse, did choke
The scorched wretches with investive smoke. Mir. for Mag. p. 829.

INVE'STMENT. n. s. [in and vestment.] Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew. Shakspeare.
You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shakspeare.

INVE'TERACY. n. s. [inveteratio, Lat.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad: obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Lat.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

To INVE'TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Lat.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into men's minds. Bacon.

Let not Atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. s. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalency of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVETERA'TION. n. s. [inveteratio, Lat.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVI'DIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Lat.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broome.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVI'DIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Sprat.

INVI'DIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

Pythagoras was the first, who abated of the invidiousness of the name, and from σοφὸς brought it down to φιλόσοφος, from a master to a lover of wisdom. South, Serm. ii. 243.

The offence has not the invidiousness of singularity. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

INVI'GILANCY.* n. s. [invigilance, old French; in and vigilancy.] Sleepiness; laziness; want of vigilance. Cotgrave.

To INVI'GORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate: to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

Gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds. Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightsome and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity. Atterbury.

INVIGORA'TION. n. s. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration. Norris.

INVI'LLAGED.* part. adj. [from in and village.] Turned into a village. Not in use.

There on a goodly plaine (by time throwne downe)
Lies buried in his dust some auncient towne;
Who now invillaged, there's only seene
In his vaste ruines what his state has beene.
Browne, Brit. Past. i. 2.

INVINCIBI'LITY.* n. s. [from invincible.] The quality of being invincible.

Thus a happy victory may be gained over invincibility itself. Barrow, Serm. on Pray without Ceasing.

INVI'NCIBLE. adj. [invincible, French; invincibilis, Lat.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I should have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shakspeare.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible errour, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgement. Locke.

If an Atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley.

INVI'NCIBLENESS.† n. s. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

The invincibleness of their ignorance. Hammond, Works, i. 303.

INVI'NCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;
And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Decay of Piety.

INVIOLABI'LITY.* n. s. [inviolabilité, Fr. from inviolable.] State or quality of being inviolable.

Having excluded all probability of the event of a systematic abuse of royal power, or a dangerous exorbitance of prerogative, our constitution exempts her kings from the degrading necessity of being accountable to the subject: She invests them with the high attribute of political impeccability; she declares, that wrong, in his public capacity, a king of Great Britain cannot do; and thus unites the most perfect security of the subject's liberty with the most absolute inviolability of the sacred person of the sovereign. Bp. Horsley, Serm. 30. Jan. 1793.

INVI'OLABLE. adj. [inviolable, Fr. inviolabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place inviolable, and these from harm. Milton, P. L.

In vain did Nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade the inviolable main;
The eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heaven, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Inviolable powers! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden, Æn.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and inviolable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable. Shakspeare.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

The inviolable saints
In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd entire. Milton, P. L.

INVI'OLABLENESS.* n. s. [from inviolable.] State or quality of being inviolable. Sherwood.

INVI'OLABLY.† adv. [from inviolable.] Without breach; without failure.

Sainct Austen saith, that the apostles inviolably kept the said vow. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) Cc. ii. b.

Mere acquaintance you have none: you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat.

INVI'OLATE. adj. [inviolate, Fr. inviolatus, Lat.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still inviolate. Bacon, Hen. VII.

But let inviolate truth be always dear
To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer. Denham.

If the past
Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd inviolate:
I beg thy pardon. Denham, Sophy.

My love your claim inviolate secures;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like Heav'n's, was kept inviolate. Dryden.

INVI'OLATED.* adj. [inviolatus, Lat.] Unprofaned; unpolluted.

A most inviolated shrine. Drayton, Barons' Wars, iv. 68.

The safe principles we have hitherto endeavoured to preserve inviolated. Sir H. Sheere, in Ld. Halifax's Miscell. p. 41.

I'NVIOUS. adj. [invius, Lat.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn love,
And virtue invious ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

I'NVIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from invious.] State of being invious; impassableness.

Which is called—inviousness and emptiness;—where all is dark and unpassable, as perviousness is the contrary.
Dr. Ward, Tr. of More's Pref. to his Philos. Works, (1710.)

To INVI'SCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.] To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The cameleon's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects. Brown.

To INVI'SCERATE.* v. a. [inviscero, Lat.] To breed; to nourish.

Inviscerating this disposition in our hearts—to love one another. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 267.

INVISIBI'LITY. n. s. [invisibilité, Fr. from invisible.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Ray.

INVI'SIBLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisibilis, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;
And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shakspeare.

'Tis wonderful
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught. Shakspeare.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton, P. L.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVI'SIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

INVITA'TION.† n. s. [invitation, Fr. invitatio, Lat.]

1. The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And soon the gracious invitation took. Dryden.

2. Allurement.

She gives the leer of invitation.
Shakspeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

INVI'TATORY.† adj. [from invito, Lat.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

In the Latin services it [the 95th] is called the invitatory psalm; it being always sung with a strong and loud voice, to hasten those people into the church, who were in the cemetery, or churchyard, or any other adjacent parts, waiting for the beginning of prayers.
Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer, iii. § 8.

INVI'TATORY.* n. s. Formerly an hymn of invitation to prayer.

Responds, invitatories, and such like things as did break the continual course of the reading of the Scripture.
Concerning the Serv. of the Church, Comm. Prayer.

To INVI'TE. v. a. [invito, Lat. inviter, Fr.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.

If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself.
Ecclus.

He comes invited by a younger son. Milton, P. L.

When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coals. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Nor art thou such
Created, or such place hast here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton, P. L.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden, Virg.

To INVI'TE. v. n. [invito, Lat.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite
To peaceful counsels. Milton, P. L.

INVI'TEMENT.* n. s. [from invite.] Act of inviting; invitation.

He never makes a general invitement, but against the publishing of a new suit; marry then you shall have more drawn to his lodging than come to the launching of some three ships.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

INVI'TER. n. s. [from invite.] One who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied. King Charles.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Smalridge, Serm.

Wines and cates the tables grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope, Odyss.

INVI'TING.* n. s. [from invite.] Invitation.

He hath sent me an earnest inviting.
Shakspeare, Tim. of Ath.

INVI'TINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look invitingly, the business is done. Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 125.

INVI'TINGNESS.* n. s. [from inviting.] Power or quality of inviting.

Elegant flowers of speech, to which the nature and resemblances of things, as well as human fancies, have an aptitude and invitingness. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 165.

To INU'MBRATE. v. a. [inumbro, Lat.] To shade; to cover with shades. Dict.

INU'NCTED.* adj. [inunctus, Lat.] Anointed. Cockeram.

Inu'nction.† n. s. [inungo, inunctus, Lat.] The act of smearing or anointing.

Irrigations, inunctions, odoraments, prescribed for the head. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 406.

The wise Author of Nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

Inu'ndant.* adj. [inundans, Lat.] Overflowing.

Days, and nights, and hours,
Thy voice, hydropick Fancy, calls aloud
For costly draughts, inundant bowls of joy. Shenstone, Econ. P. i.

To INU'NDATE. v. a. [inundo, Lat. This word has been reprobated as one of the affected introductions of modern writers into our language. This is not the case; for we find inundated used in the sense of overwhelmed, nearly two centuries since, in the vocabulary of Cockeram.] To overflow a place with water; to overwhelm.

Inunda'tion. n. s. [inondation, Fr. inundatio, Lat.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That she should give her sorrow so much sway:
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakspeare.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places; so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise
Above the highest hills. Milton, P. L.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is Winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted. Spenser on Ireland.

Inundersta'nding.* adj. [in and understanding.] Wanting the faculties of the mind; void of understanding.

Many of the beasts of the field, divers of the plants of the earth, are of a more durable constitution, and outlive the sons of men. And can we think that such material and mortal, that such inunderstanding souls should by God and nature be furnished with bodies of so long permansion, and that our spirits should be joined unto flesh so subject to corruption, so suddenly dissolvable, were it not that they lived but once, and so enjoyed that life for a longer season, and then went soul and body to the same destruction, never to be restored to the same subsistence? Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

To I'NVOCATE.† v. a. [invoco, Lat.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne? Shakspeare.

The church of Rome, in her publick and allowed offices, prays to dead men and women, who are, or whom they suppose to be, beatified: and these they invocate as preservers. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 9.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invocate his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton, S. A.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin or the draff of servile food
Consume me, and oft invocated death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton, S. A.

Invoca'tion. n. s. [invocation, Fr. invocatio, Lat.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.

My invocation is Honest and fair, and in his mistress' name. Shakspeare.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wase.

I will strain myself to breath out this one invocation. Howell.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addison on Italy.

I'nvoice. n. s. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyez, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

To Invo'ke. v. a. [invoco, Latin; invoquer, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invocate.

The power I will invoke dwells in her eyes. Sidney.

One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest, of whom to be invok'd. Milton, P. L.

The skilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior

To INVO'LVE.† v. a. [involvo, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

The floods my soul involv'd below,
The swallowing deeps besieg'd me round. Sandys, Sacred Songs, p. 20.

Leave a singed bottom all involv'd
With stench and smoke. Milton, P. L.

No man could miss his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness. Decay of Chr. Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

3. To entwist; to join.

He knows his end with mine involv'd. Milton, P. L.

4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.

Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all. Sprat.

One death involves Tyrants and slaves. Thomson, Summer.

5. To entangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involv'd their snaky folds. Milton, P. L.

Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton, P. L.

8. In mathematicks, to multiply any quantity by itself any given number of times.

Invo'luntarily.† adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.

They are not the work of the soul itself, but involuntarily obtruded upon it. A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 183.

Invo'lvedness.* n. s. [from involved.] State of being involved.

The involvedness of all men in the guilt of swearing. Boyle against Custom. Swear. p. 13.

Invo'luntáriness.* n. s. [from involuntary.] Want of choice or will.

There is not an absolute involuntariness in this engagement, but a mixed one. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 8.

INVO'LUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin.] involontaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confess. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

Involu'tion.† n. s. [involution, old French; involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

2. The state of being entangled; complication.

Leave never an angle or involution in it. Hammond, Works, iv. 502.

All things are mixed, and causes blended by mutual involutions. Glanville, Scepsis.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-how, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth; and is therefore preserved with great care, not only as medical in diseases, but effectual in success, concerning the infant and others; which is surely no more than a continued superstition. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Inurba'nity.* n. s. [in and urbanity.] Want of courteousness; rudeness; unkindness.

An answer to pope Urban his inurbanity. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 503.

Discoursing such idle stuff to the maids and widows, as his own servile inurbanity forbears not to put into the Apostle's mouth. Milton, Colasterion.

To INU'RE.† v. a. [in and ure.]

1. To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

That it may no painful work endure,
It to strong labour can itself enure. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately enured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser on Ireland.

Because they so proudly insult, we must a little inure their ears with hearing, how others, whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the self-same language with us. Hooker.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgement, between men therewith inured, and that which now men are, as between men that are now, and innocents. Hooker.

The forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

Then cruel, by their sports to blood inur'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd. Milton, P. R.

To inure
Our prompt obedience. Milton, P. L.

They, who had been most inured to business, had not in their lives ever undergone so great fatigue for twenty days together. Clarendon.

We may inure ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. Addison, Guardian.

2. To commit. Obsolete.

He gan that ladie strongly to appele
Of many hainous crimes by her enured. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 39.

Inu'rement. n. s. [from inure.] Practice; habit; use; custom; frequency.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance a secret appetite, and (as I may term it) an habitual inclination to the site it held before; then how much more may we hope, through the very same means, education being nothing else but a constant plight and inurement, to induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature! Wotton, Surv. of Education.

To Inu'rn. v. a. [in and urn.] To intomb; to bury.

The sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To cast thee up again. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Amidst the tears of Trojan dames inurn'd,
And by his loyal daughters truly mourn'd. Dryden.

Inusita'tion.* n. s. [inusitatus, Lat.] State of being unused; want of use.

The mammæ of the male have not vanished by inusitation. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 23.

Inuti'lity.† n. s. [inutilité, Fr. inutilitas, Lat.] Uselessness; unprofitableness. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

You see the inutility of foreign travel. Hurd.

Inu'tterable.* adj. [in and utterable.] Not to be uttered; inexpressible.

All prodigious things,
Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd. Milton, P. L.

The planets — they invoked with secret or inutterable invocations. Patrick on Gen. xli. 8.

INVU'LNERABLE. adj. [invulnerable, Fr. invulnerabilis, Lat.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakspeare.

Nor vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal dint none can resist. Milton, P. L.

Vanessa, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

Invu'lnerableness.* n. s. [from invulnerable.] State of being invulnerable.

We wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; which needs must be most dangerous unto us. 1. For their warinesse that grapple with us. 2. For their invulnerableness, they being spirits; whereas we are flesh and blood. Bp. Prideaux, Euch. (1656,) p. 92.

To Inwa'll. v. a. [in and wall.] To inclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly. Spenser on Ireland.

I'NWARD. }
I'NWARDS. } adv. [inpeaрd, Saxon.]

1. Towards the internal parts; within.

The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflexion or incurvity; concavely.

He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Looking inward we are stricken dumb; looking upward we speak and prevail. Hooker.

Celestial light
Shine inwards, and the soul through all her pow'rs

I'NWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside; but within.

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And waste his inward gall with deep despight. Spenser, F. Q.
To each inward part
It shoots invisible. Milton, P. L.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly. Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward smiles their flattery I receiv'd;
But bent and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd, in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestick; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser on Ireland.

All my inward friends abhorred me. Job, xix. 19.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspeare.

I'NWARD.† n. s. [Sax. innepeaɲbe, the bowels.]

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels. Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid
The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton, P. L.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mortimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.

I'NWARDLY.† adv. [Sax. inpeaɲblice; from inward.]

1. In the heart; privately.

That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify. Hooker.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. Shakspeare.

Mean time the king, though inwardly he mourn'd,
In pomp triumphant to the town return'd,
Attended by the chiefs. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

2. In the parts within; internally.

Let Benedick, like cover'd fire,
Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly. Shakspeare.

Cantharides he prescribes both outwardly and inwardly. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. With inflexion or concavity.

I'NWARDNESS.† n. s. [from inward.]

1. Intimacy; familiarity.

You know my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio. Shakspeare.

His nephew is fallen into some trouble, by reason of his familiarity and inwardness with Sir R. Cotton. Bourgchier to Abp. Usher, (1629,) Lett. p. 415.

2. Internal state. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Sense cannot arrive to the inwardness
Of things, nor penetrate the crusty fence
Of constipated matter. More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 28.

To INWE'AVE. v. a. preter. inwove or inweaved, part. pass. inwove, inwoven, or inweaved. [in and weave.]

1. To mix any thing in weaving, so that it forms part of the texture.

A fair border, wrought of sundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.
Down they cast
Their crowns, inwove with amaranth and gold. Milton, P. L.
And o'er soft palls of purple grain unfold
Rich tap'stry, stiffen'd with inwoven gold. Pope, Odyss.

2. To intertwine; to complicate.

The roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade. Milton, P. L.

To INWHE'EL.* v. a. [in and wheel.] To surround: to encircle.

Heaven's grace inwheel ye!
And all good thoughts and prayers dwell about ye!
Abundance be your friend! and holy Charity
Be ever at your hand to crown ye glorious!
Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

I'NWIT.* n. s. [Saxon, inpit, conscientia.] Mind; understanding. Obsolete. Wicliffe and Chaucer use it.

To INWO'OD. v. a. [in and wood.] To hide in woods. Not used.

To INWRA'P. v. a. [in and wrap.]

1. To cover by involution; to involve.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtil net,
Inwrapped in foul smoak. Spenser, F. Q.

This, as an amber drop, inwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we
May in your through-shine front our hearts' thoughts see.
Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolved: if it be made not inwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be enrap or inrap, from in and rap, rapio, Lat. to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me, I do feel't and see't;
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.
For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

To INWRE'ATHE. v. a. [in and wreathe.] To surround as with a wreathe.

Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams.
Milton, P. L.

Nor less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow. Thomson.

INWRO'UGHT. adj. [in and wrought.] Adorned with work.

Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower, inscrib'd with woe.
Milton, Lycidas.

JOB.† n. s. [A low word now much in use, of which I cannot tell the etymology. Dr. Johnson. — "Κόπος (kopos) in Greek signifies labour; and in our ordinary word job, a piece of work, we again trace it under a different form." Whiter, Etym. Magn. p. 276.]

1. Petty, piddling work; a piece of chance work; in some places a piece of labour undertaken at a stated price.

2. A low, mean, lucrative, busy affair.

He was now with his old friends, like an old favourite of a cunning minister after the job is over. Arbuthnot.

No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question or a job. Pope.

Such patents as these never were granted with a view of being a job, for the interest of a particular person to the damage of the publick. Swift.

3. A sudden stab with a sharp instrument. [hieb, Germ. a stroke, from hauwen, to strike. Wachter, and Serenius.]

He grudges not our moderate and seasonable jollities. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 69.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton, P. L.

Good men are never so surprised as in the midst of their jollities, nor so fatally overtaken and caught as when the table is made the snare. South.

With branches we the fanes adorn, and waste
In jollity the day ordain'd to be the last. Dryden, Æn.

My heart was filled with melancholy to see several dropping in the midst of mirth and jollity. Addison, Spect.

3. Handsomeness; beauty. See the third sense of JOLLY.

When nature is in her chiefest jollity, she tapestries the whole universe with a world of delicious flowers. Partheneia Sacra, (1633,) p. 31.

JO'LLY.† adj. [joli, Fr. jovialis, Lat. Formerly jolif; and sometimes joylife, as by Gower; and afterwards joyly: " Is not your doctrine a joyly and holesom doctrine?" Stapleton Fort. of the Faith, 1565. fol. 37.]

1. Gay; merry; airy; cheerful; lively; jovial.

Like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English. Shakspeare, K. John.

O nightingale!
Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart do'st fill,
While the jolly hours lead on propitious May. Milton, Sonnet.

All my griefs to this are jolly,
Nought so sad as melancholy, Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Even ghosts had learn'd to groan;
But free from punishment, as free from sin,
The shades liv'd jolly, and without a king. Dryden, Juv.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forsook his easy couch at early day. Dryden.

A shepherd now along the plain he roves,
And with his jolly pipe delights the groves. Prior.

2. Plump; like one in high health.

He catches at an apple of Sodom, which though it may entertain his eye with a florid, jolly white and red, yet, upon the touch, it shall fill his hand only with stench and foulness. South.

3. Handsome; well-favoured. Cotgrave.

Full jolly knight he seem'd, and faire did sit. Spenser, F. Q.

JOLLY-*Boat. A term for a ship's small boat; probably a corruption of julle, Swedish, a yawl.

To JOLT.† v. n. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson. — Perhaps from the Swedish hjul, a wheel; from which Serenius derives julra, to totter.] To shake as a carriage on rough ground.

Every little unevenness of the ground will cause such a jolting of the chariot as to hinder the motion of its sails. Wilkins.

Violent motion, as jolting in a coach, may be used in this case. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A coach and six horses is the utmost exercise you can bear, and how glad would you be, if it could waft you in the air to avoid jolting? Swift.

To JOLT.† v. a. To shake one as a carriage does.

Is it not very unhappy that Lysander must be attacked and applauded in a wood, and Corinna jolted and commended in a stage-coach? Tatler, No. 215.

Jolt. n. s. [from the verb.] Shock; violent agitation.

The symptoms are, bloody water upon a sudden jolt or violent motion. Arbuthnot on Diet.

The first jolt had like to have shaken me out; but afterwards the motion was easy. Swift.

Jo'lter.* n. s. [from jolt.] That which shakes or jolts. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Jo'lthead.† n. s. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson. — Probably from jole, the head; a contemptuous reduplication.] A great head; a dolt; a blockhead.

Fie on thee, jolthead, thou canst not read. Shakspeare.

Had man been a dwarf, he had scarce been a reasonable creature; for he must then have either had a jolthead, and so there would not have been body and blood enough to supply his brain with spirits; or he must have had a small head, and so there would not have been brain enough for his business. Grew.

Jo'nick.* adj. [Fr. Ionique; from Ionia in Greece.]

1. Belonging to one of the orders of architecture.

There is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Transtevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute. Addison on Italy.

2. Denoting an airy kind of musick.

Go to their tune; the one delights in the Ionique, the other altogether in the Dorique.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 73.

3. Belonging to the dialect of the Ionians.

In St. Mark the augment is taken away from the verb; ῥῖνον πεποιήκεισαν for ἐπεποιήκεισαν; which is frequent in the Ionic and poetical dialect. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. ii. 56.

4. Denoting the first of the ancient sect of philosophers; of which the founder was Thales.

Jonqui'lle. n. s. [jonquille, Fr.] A species of daffodil. The flowers of this plant are greatly esteemed for their strong sweet scent. Miller.

JOT.† n. s. [jota, Gothick; ıoca, Sax. ἰῶτα, Greek; jod, Heb. See also Iota.] A point; a tittle; the least quantity assignable.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Spenser, F. Q.

Go, Eros, send his treasure after, do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakspeare.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to Heav'n. Shakspeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shakspeare.

I argue not
Against Heaven's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heart or hope; but still bear up, and steer
Right onwards. Milton, Sonnet.

You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up, because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Estrange.

A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

To Jot. v. a. [from the noun.] To set down; to make a memorandum of. Modern.

Io'ta.* n. s. [ıoca, Sax. iota, Fr. See Jot.] A tittle.

It is no less than a direct affront to our Creator and Governor, in a branch of that law, that he values as a transcript of his own holiness, and enforces by the penalty of eternal death threatened to the transgressors of the least iota of it. Barrow, vol. i. S. 10.

Nor have all the self-reflexions or abstractions of the most exalted minds, from any combinations or alterations of ideas, been able, amidst their other prodigious discoveries, to add a single iota to one of these.
Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 115.

Jo'tting.* n. s. [from To jot.] A memorandum; as, cursory jottings. Of very recent usage. The Scotch also employ this word. See Dr. Jamieson's Dictionary.

JO'VIAL.† adj. [jovialis, Lat. jovial, French; which Cotgrave renders "jovial, sanguine, born under the planet Jupiter;" and he describes a jovialist as "one that is naturally, and by complexion, pleasant or sanguine." A learned etymologist of modern times considers the word, in its secondary sense, as connected with jubilo, meaning to make a noise of loud and unrestrained merriment. "From the accidental similarity of jovial, loudly joyous, to jovial, relating to Jupiter, a confusion has arisen; and our ancient poets, as well as their commentators, appear to have imagined, that jovial, in the sense of merry, was deduced from jovial, as a quality belonging to Jove." Whiter's Etymol. Magn. p. 219. Skinner agrees with Cotgrave.]

1. Under the influence of Jupiter.

The fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Gay; airy; merry; cheerful.

The heavens, always jovial,
Look'd on them lovely. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 51.

My lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks,
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Our jovial star reign'd at his birth. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, to be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

His odes are some of them panegyrical, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanalian. Dryden.

Perhaps the jest that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

Jo'vialist.* n. s. [from jovial.] One who lives jovially. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give this word. See the etymology of Jovial.

What talk we to these jovialists? It is liberty, with them, for a man to speak what he thinks, to take what he likes, to do what he lists! Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 21.

The jovialists of the world drink wine in bowls. Bp. Hall, Works, iii. 678.

JO'VIALLY.† adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.

Though his table be jovially furnished. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 235.

Fare jovially, and clap your hands. B. Jonson, Fox, Epilogue.

JO'VIALNESS.† n. s. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.

They are not become true penitents. — Swearing, with such persons, is but a grace and lustre to their speech; — lying, but wit's craft or policy; drunkenness, jovialness or good fellowship: — thus do they baptize vice by the name of virtue. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 32.

JO'VIALTY.* n. s. [from jovial.] Merriment; festivity.

The first day vapours away in tabaco, feasts, and other jovialty. Sir T. Herbert. Trav. p. 308.

The night, — he had purposed to spend in jovaltie, whilst others slept. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 245.

To think that this perhaps might be the last banquet they should taste of; that they should themselves shortly become the feast of worms and serpents, could not but somewhat spoil the gust of their highest delicacies, and disturb the sport of their loudest jovialties. Barrow, Works, vol. iii. S. 14.

JO'UISANCE. n. s. [rejouissance, Fr.] Jollity; merriment; festivity. Obsolete.

Colin, my dear, when shall it please thee sing,
As thou wert wont, songs of some jouisance?
Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.

JO'URNAL. adj. [journale, Fr. giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.

Now gan the golden Phœbus for to steep
His fiery face in billows of the West,
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest. Spenser, F. Q.

Ere twice
The sun has made his journal greeting to
The under generation, you shall find
Your safety manifested. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom
Is breach of all. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. s. [journal, Fr. giornale, Italian.]

1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.

Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate. Hayward on Edw. VI.

Time has destroyed two noble journals of the navigation of Hanno and of Hamilcar. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Any paper published daily.

JO'URNALIST.† n. s. [from journal.] A writer of journals.

The reader will be surprised to find the abovementioned journalist taking so much care of a life, that was filled with such inconsiderable actions. Addison, Spect. No. 318.

To JO'URNALIZE.* v. a. [from journal.] To enter in an account of daily transactions.

He kept his journal very diligently, but then what was there to journalize? Johnson.

JO'URNEY. n. s. [journée, Fr.]

1. The travel of a day.

When Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this day's hard journey
Soundly invite him. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey. Milton, P. L.

2. Travel by land; distinguished from a voyage or travel by sea.

So are the horses of the enemy,
In general journey bated and brought low. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The smooth hair'd horses and the rapid car. Pope, Odyss.

3. Passage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet, Theory.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou dost thy radiant journies run,
Through every distant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen
The greatest prince, the brightest queen. Prior.

To JO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem
Are journeying to salute the emperor. Shakspeare.

We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you. Numbers, x. 29.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill;
Not panting after growing beauties, so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open. Bacon.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journey. Milton, P. L.

Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wiseman, Surgery.

JO'URNEYMAN. n. s. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Cowel.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journeymen under me to furnish the rest of the nation. Addison.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the business into his hands: we must starve or turn journeymen to old Lewis Baboon. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

JO'URNEYWORK. n. s. [journée, French, and work.] Work performed for hire; work done by the day.

Did no committee sit, where he
Might cut out journeywork for thee?
And set thee a task with subordination,
To stitch up sale and sequestration. Hudibras.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journeywork to her neighbours. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

JOUST.† n. s. [joust, Fr. jost, impetus; ant. Fland. Serenius.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight. It is now written less properly just. Dr. Johnson. — Spenser writes it giust, following the Italian giostra. Lat. juxtà.

And sing of bloody Mars, of wars, of giusts. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.

Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milton, P. L.

To JOUST.† v. n. [jouster, Fr.] To run in the tilt.

So forth they went, and both together giusted. Spenser, F. Q.

All who since
Jousted in Aspramont or Montalban. Milton, P. L.

JOWL.* See JOLE.

JO'WLER.† n. s. [perhaps corrupted from howler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps from jowl, as jole, the head, is sometimes written; hounds having usually large heads.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still
Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill. Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY.† n. s. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Menage deduces the word from the Latin gaudium; Morin from the Greek interjection ἰώ, Lat. io, a cry of joy. The abbreviation of gau for gaudium, however exists.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation; delight. Dr. Johnson here cites the definition of Locke: " Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good." It is thus minutely distinguished by one of our old learned divines. " He doth not say, ' with food and joy,' Acts, xiv. 17. For joy, properly taken, hath its seat in the mind and spirit of man; nor is it there placed without the spirit of God; whereas the gladness, whereof the apostle there speaks, may harbour in the inferior or affective part This difference, which we now observe, between joy and gladness in our English, the Greek writers curiously observe between εὐφροσύνη and χαρά; so do the Latins between lætitia and gaudium." Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 541.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdr.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, iö hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shakspeare.
Come, love and health to all:
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakspeare.
Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden, Don Sebast.
The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glittering like a star, and took her place:
Her heavenly form beheld, all wish'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

The said Mrs. Flambeau had not been to see the lady Townly, and wish her joy, since her marriage with Sir Ralph. Tatler, No. 262.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,
Although the last, not least; ——
What can you say? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.
I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He will joy over thee with singing. Zeph. iii, 17.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Hab. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairfax.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less. Bacon, Ess.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love. Wotton.
Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee, this paradise,
And thy fair Eve. Milton, P. L.
Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free. Denham.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.

Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.

She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rouz'd the raging main. Pope.

3. [Jouir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession of.

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Titus, Andron.
I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milton, P. L.
Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden, Span. Fr.

JO'YANCE. n. s. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity. Obsolete.

With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.
His gladfulness and kingly joyance. Spenser.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full.]

1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings, viii. 66.

My soul shall be joyful in my God. Isa. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope, Odyss.

JO'YFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriours all, adieu. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to flie:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JO'YFULNESS. n. s. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut. xxviii. 47.

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden, Alex. Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest
Forsakes his food, and, pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass. Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Titus, Andron.

Here Love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd,
Casual fruition. Milton, P. L.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Chr. Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Addison.

Jo'ylessly.* adv. [from joyless.] Without receiving pleasure; without giving pleasure.

Jo'ylessness.* n. s. [from joyless.] State of being joyless.

Is the joy of heaven no perfecter in itself, but that it needs the sourness of this life to give it a taste? Is that joy, and that glory, but a comparative glory, and a comparative joy? not such in itself, but such in comparison of the joylessness and the ingloriousness of this world? I know, my God, it is far, far otherwise. Donne, Devot. (1625,) p. 426.

Jo'yous.† adj. [old French, joious; modern, joyeux.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend did no less joyous deem. Spenser, F. Q.

Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? Isaiah, xxiii. 7.

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryden.

Fast by her flowery bank the sons of Arcas,
Favourites of Heaven, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. Spenser, F. Q.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed every friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs. Dryden.

Jo'yously.* adv. [from joyous.] With joy; with gladness. Huloet, and Barret.

They were of the senate and people joyously received. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 131.

Jo'yousness.* n. s. [from joyous.] State of being joyous.

Ipecacua'nha.† n. s. [An Indian plant.]

Ipecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly. Hill, Mat. Med.

The violent operation of ipecacuanha lies in its resin, but the saline extract is a gentle purge and diuretic by the stimulus of its salts. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 84.

I'pocras.* n. s. [See Hippocras. Where Dr. Johnson follows the opinions of many in explaining it a medicated wine, quasi vinum Hippocratis. Morin thinks it more probably derived from the Gr. ὑπο and κρᾶσις, a mixture, and to have no connection with the name of Hippocrates. But Mr. Tyrwhitt says, that "ipocras, wine mixed with spices and other ingredients, was so named, because strained through a woollen cloth, called the sleeve of Hippocrates."] Spiced wine.

He drinketh ipocras, &c. Chaucer, Merch. Tale.

Draughts of ippocras out of a great bowl. Sir J. Finett, Observ. on Ambass. (1656,) p. 11.

Irascibi'lity.* n. s. [from irascible.] State of being angry.

The irascibility of this class of tyrants is generally exerted upon petty provocations. Johnson, Rambler, No. 112.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Lat. irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscible distractions the crasis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

Ira'scibleness.* n. s. [from irascible.] State of being angry. Scott.

IRE.† n. s. [ira, Lat. ıɲɲe, Saxon; ire, old French:

"My good father, tell me this;
"What thing is ire? Sonne, it is
That in our English wrath is hote."
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.]

Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents' ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton, P. L.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton, P. L.

For this the avenging Power employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire. Dryden.

I'reful.† adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

By many hands your father was subdued;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise. Fairfax.

Is he not ireful, and replenished with wrath and displeasure? Homilies, Serm. ii. against Adultery.

In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madness laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

I'refully.† adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

[He] irefully enrag'd would needs to open arms. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 4.

I'renarch.* n. s. [irenarque, Fr. εἰρηνάρχης, Gr. from εἰρήνη, peace, and ἀρχός, a ruler.] An officer of the old Greek empire, employed to preserve publick tranquillity.

I'RIS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.

Beside the solary iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunary, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breath of the interior iris 2 gr. 10′; and the breadth of the red yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton, Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses, and jessamine. Milton, P. L.

I'RISH.* n. s.

1. A native of Ireland. [Erin.]

All the customs of the Irish, which I have often noted and compared, would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original of them, and the antiquity of that people, which in truth I think to be more auncient than most that I know in this end of the world. Spenser on Ireland.

It was from the time when he [Swift] first began to patronize the Irish, that they may date their riches and prosperity. Johnson, Life of Swift.

2. The Irish language.

There are many compositions of letters in Irish, which have not the same force in English. Richardson on the Irish Language, (1712.)

3. A game of elder times.

The inconstancy of Irish fitly represents the changeableness of humane occurrences, since it ever stands so fickle that one malignant throw can quite ruine a never so well built game. Hall, Horæ Vacivæ, (1646.)

4. Linen so called, being made in Ireland.

I'RISH.* adj. Denoting what belongs to Ireland, what is produced or made in Ireland.

The Irish will be better drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spenser on Ireland.

My couches, beds, and window-curtains are of Irish stuff. Guardian, No. 49.

I'RISHISM.* n. s. [from Irish.] Mode of speaking used by the Irish.

"I will be there as soon as you." I will, instead of I shall, is a Scoticism. Douce. And an Irishism too. Reed, Note on Shaksp. Com. of Err.

I'RISHRY.* n. s. [from Irish.] The people of Ireland. See ENGLISHRY.

I knew that among the Irishry it was not yet clean taken away. Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 157.

To IRK.† v. a. [yrk, work, Icelandick. Dr. Johnson. — yrkia, to urge on, Goth. Serenius. — But Lye rightly supposes it to be the Saxon peopc, or pyjic, pain, torture, anxiety.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pœna est, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, tædet, it irketh. Dr. Johnson. — Certainly it is commonly used impersonally, but the following example is an exception:

But when these pelting poets in their rimes
Shall taunt, or jest, or paint our wicked workes,
And cause the people know and curse our crimes,
This ugly fault no tyrant liues but irkes. Mir. for Mag. p. 456.

It irketh me to hear one thing so often. Huloet.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakspeare.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I'RKSOME.† adj. [from irk.]

1. Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shakspeare.

Since that thou can'st talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shakspeare, As you like it

Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, till his great chief return. Milton, P. L.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton, P. L.

There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison, Spect.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

2. Weary; tired. Not now in use.

The people then embracing titles new,
Irksome of present, and longing for change,
Assented soon, because they love to range. Mir. for Mag. p. 352.

I'RKSOMELY.† adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

Our doctrine forces not errour and unwillingness irksomely to keep it. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce, i. 13.

Neither irksomely hating, nor fondly loving, himself. Barrow, Works, i. 4.

I'RKSOMENESS.† n. s. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

As Castilio describes it, the beginning, middle, end of love, is nought else but sorrow, vexation, torment, irksomeness. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 521.

Thus was he driven to shift and change his desire from one thing to another, finding solid content in never a one of them; but, after some small experience, great irksomeness in them all. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 209.

The irksomeness of that truth, which they brought, was so unpleasant to them, that every where they call it a burden. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

I'RON.† n. s. [haiarn, Welsh; iorn, Erse; iarrun, Irish; ıjın, ıjıen, Sax. iern, Dan. iarn, Iceland. iarn, earn, Goth. "ab Iberia sic dictum." Serenius.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lighest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakspeare.

If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Num. xxxv. 16.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron flag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward on Fossils.

Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work. Moxon.

2. An instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakspeare, Coriol.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Job, xli. 7.

For this your locks in paper durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Psalms, Comm. Prayer.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron. Psalm cv. 18.

I'RON.† adj. [iren, Saxon adjective.]

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Some are of an iron red, shining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Polecats and weesels do a great deal of injury to warrens: the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward on Fossils.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh; stern; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Pouring forth their blood in brutish wise,
That any iron eyes, to see it, would agrise. Spenser, F. Q.

No man so iron hearted but the loadstone of such love may draw him. Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615,) C. 8. b.

These iron hearted soldiers are so cold. Beaum and Fl. Laws of Candy.

Three rigorous virgins, waiting still behind,
Assist the throne of the iron scepter'd king. Crashaw, Sosp. d'Herode.

But O sad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton, Il Pens.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope, Odyss.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
To exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress'd. Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with consid'rate eyes. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

To I'RON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.
2. To shackle with irons.

I'RONED.✻ adj. [from iron.] Armed; dressed in iron, (ferratus.) Huloet.

I'RONHEARTED.✻ adj. Hardhearted. See the third sense of the adjective IRON.

IRO'NICAL.† adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

Heraclitus the philosopher, out of a serious meditation of men's lives, fell a weeping; and with continual tears bewailed their misery, madness, and folly. Democritus on the other side burst out a laughing, their whole life to him seemed so ridiculous; and he was so far carried with this ironical passion, that the citizens of Abdera took him to be mad. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The whole court shall take itself abus'd
By our ironical confederacy. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRO'NICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRO'NICK.✻ adj. [ironique, French.] Speaking by contraries; ironical.

Most Socratick lady!
Or, if you will, ironick! B. Jonson, New Inn.

I had better leisure to contemplate that ironick satire of Juvenal. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 11.

I'RONIST.✻ n. s. [from irony.] One who speaks by contraries.

A poet, or orator, — would have no more to do but to send to the ironist for his sarcasms. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

Socrates took the name of ironist from the continued humour, and ridicule, which runs through his moral discourses. Hurd.

I'RONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

I'RONMOULD.✻ n. s. [iron and mould.] A mark or spot on linen, occasioned by the rust of iron.

Fine linen, being once stained with black ink, though it be washed never so, will retain an ironmould ever after. Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1635,) p. 378.

We have seen arms, the ironmould that stained our religion, and eat out order and laws. Spencer, Righteous Ruler, (1660,) p. 37.

I'RONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Robinson Cruso.

I'RONWORT. n. s. [sideritis, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

I'RONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Fossils.

I'RONY.† n. s. [ironie, French; εἰρωνεία. Gr. from εἴρων, a dissembler.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

I'ROUS.✻ adj. [ireux, French.] Angry; passionate. Obsolete.

It is great harm, and certes great pitee,
To set an irous man in high degree. Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

This Naman Sirus,
So fel, and so irous. Skelton, Poems, p. 174.

IRRA'DIANCE. } n. s. [irradiance, French; irradio, Latin.]
IRRA'DIANCY. }

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency; the irradiancy and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heavenly Spirits? Or do they mix

To IRRA'DIATE.✝ v. a. [irradio, Lat.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place, it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South, Serm. ii. 374.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Reason — immixed and contempered with the soul, and not only extrinsecally irradiating it. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

Celestial light,
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
Irradiate; there plant eyes: all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton, P. L.

God — is lodged in our very essence, and is as a soul within the soul, to irradiate its understanding, rectify its will, purify its passions, and enliven all the powers of man. Spectator, No. 571.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's store
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.

To IRRA'DIATE.* v. n. To shine upon.

Day was the state of the hemisphere, on which light irradiated; and night was the state of the opposite hemisphere, on which rested the shadow projected by the body of the earth. Bp. Horne, Lett. on Infidelity, L. 10.

IRRA'DIATE.* part. adj. Decorated with shining ornaments.

The peacock spreads his rainbow train, with eyes
Of sapphire bright, irradiate each with gold. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 4.

IRRADIA'TION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation. Hale.

IRRA'TIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discoursive faculty.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first,
Daughter of sin, among the irrational
Death introduc'd. Milton, P. L.

He hath eaten, and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns;
Irrational till then. Milton, P. L.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application. Harvey on Consumptions.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of inestimable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious. Ralegh.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
Servant of servants, on his vitious race. Milton, P. L.

Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue. Ray.

If an irreverent expression or thought too wanton are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them. Dryden.

IRRE'VERENTLY. adv. [from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to use the gospel irreverently. Gov. of the Tongue.

IRREVE'RSIBLE.† adj. [in and reverse.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

It is irreversible, it cannot be revoked. South, Serm. vii. 332.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced. Rogers.

IRREVE'RSIBLENESS.* n. s. [from irreversible.] State of being irreversible.

IRREVE'RSIBLY. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREVOCABI'LITY.* n. s. [from irrevocable.] Impossibility of recall.

IRRE'VOCABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, French.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Shakspeare.
Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have past upon her. Shakspeare, As you like it.

That which is past is gone and irrevocable, therefore they do but trifle that labour in past matters. Bacon, Essays.

The second, both for piety renown'd,
And puissant deeds, a promise shall receive
Irrevocable, that his regal throne
For ever shall endure. Milton, P. L.
By her irrevocable fate,
War shall the country waste and change the state. Dryden.
The other victor flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;
For ever lost, the irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night. Dryden.
Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.

IRRE'VOCABLENESS.* n. s. [from irrevocable.] The state of being irrevocable. Ash.

IRRE'VOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished. Boyle.

IRRE'VOLUBLE.* adj. [Lat. irrevolutus.] That has no revolution.

Progressing the dateless and irrevoluble circle of eternity. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

To I'RRIGATE.† v. a. [irrigo. Lat.] To wet; to moisten; to water. Cockeram.

It hath certain glandules—which by their viscous moisture do irrigate, and as it were oil, the pipe; that it takes off the harshness that otherwise would be found, and adds much sweetness and pleasantness to the musick. Smith on Old Age, p. 142.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members. Ray on the Creatio

They keep a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. A. Philips.

IRRIGA'TION.† n. s. [from irrigate.]

1. The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation. Bacon.

Fomentations, irrigations,—prescribed for the head. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 406.

I wish it may also flow in spiritual blessings; and doubt not but that, by the irrigation rather than inundation of this flood, they shall encrease in them.

Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 209.

2. State of being watered.

In April, and the spring time, his lordship [lord Bacon] would, when it rained, take his coach (open) to receive the benefit of irrigation, which, he was wont to say, was very wholesome, because of the nitre in the air. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 235.

That every of us fructify in some proportion answerable to our irrigation. Hammond, Works, iv. 574.

Irri'guous. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flowery lap
Of some irriguous valley spread her store. Milton, P. L.

2. Dewy; moist. Philips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguus sopor.

Rash Elpenor
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
To exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep:
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep opprest. Philips.

Irri'sion.† n. s. [irrision, old French; irrisio, Lat.] The act of laughing at another; the act of mocking.

They are printed deeper than can be blotted out with all their artificial and forced irrisions.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 126.

By way of sarcasm and irrision.
Gregory, Doctr. of the Glor. Trin. p. 6.

Ham, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrision, and exposing of his father, incurs his curse. Woodward.

Irritabi'lity.* n. s. [irritabilité, Fr. from irritable.] State or quality of being irritable.

I'rritable.* adj. [irritabilis, Lat.]

1. Easily provoked.

The wise will determine from the gravity of the case; the irritable, from their sensibility to oppression. Burke.

2. That may be agitated.

Irri'tant.* adj. [irritans, Lat. from irritus, void. See To Irri'tate, to render void.] Rendering void. The same forensick term is used in Scotland.

The States elected Henry duke of Anjou for their king, with this clause irritant; that if he did violate any part of his oath, the people should owe him no allegiance.
Hayward, Answ. to Dolman, (1603,) ch. 7.

To I'RRITATE.† v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, Fr. Thus we formerly had to irrite, following the French word so closely. See Cotgrave, and also Sherwood. Some consider the root of this word to be the Latin ira, anger. Morin agrees with Vossius, that it comes from the Greek ἐρέθω, which has the same meaning as irritate; adding that the Latin irrito was also written in conformity to the Greek word, with only one r.]

1. To provoke; to teaze; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Laud's power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his cholerick disposition. Clarendon.

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritateth them.
Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.

Air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

Rous'd
By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson, Summer.

I'rritate.* part. adj. Heightened.

When they are collected, the heat becomes more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To IRRI'TATE. v. a. [low Lat. irritare, to make null, from irritus. See Irritant.] To render null or void.

If any thing should come to pass otherwise than it doth, yet God's foreknowledge could not be irritated by it, for then he did not know that it should come to pass as it doth.
Bp. Bramhall, Works, p. 727.

Irrita'tion.† n. s. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritate.]

1. Provocation; exasperation. Sherwood.

2. Stimulation; vellication.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbuthnot.

I'rritatory.* adj. [from irritate.] Stimulating.

The other peradventure is sufficiently grounded for principles of faith, yet is weak by reason either of some passion, or of some irritatory and troublesome humour in his behaviour.
Hales, Rem. p. 45.

Nothing hinders wounds from cicatrising more than concourse of humour to the diseased part, and keeping things irritatory about the orifice of the wound. Hales, Rem. p. 285.

IRRU'PTION.† n. s. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

How doth the water rage with his inundations, irruptions, flinging down towns, cities, villages, bridges, besides shipwrecks! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 4.

I refrain, too suddenly,
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Lest evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milton, S. A.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart, puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Five or six weeks before my lord's fatal irruption into the city. Wotton, Rem. p. 180.

The famous wall of China, built against the irruptions of the Tartars, was begun above a hundred years before the Incarnation. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 189.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Addison on Italy.

Irru'ptive.* adj. [irruptus, Lat.] Bursting forth; rushing down or in.

Conscious fears his soul affright,
And storms of wrath and indignation dread
Seem ready to displode irruptive on his head.
Whitehouse, Ode to Justice, (Poems, 1794.)

IS.† [ıſ, Saxon; es, Celt. ys, Teut. ist, Goth. est, Lat. ἐστι, Gr. See To Be.]

1. The third person singular of To be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words. St. John, vii. 47.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer. x. 5

My thought, whose murther yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting.
Shakspeare.

Isago'gical.* adj. [Gr. εἰσαγωγικὸς, εἰς, into, and ἄγω, to lead.] Introductory; belonging to an introduction.

I will make further relation
Of this isagogicall collation. Skelton, Poems, p. 162.

Scaliger was bold to call him Merodac; but he repented of that in his canons isagogical.
Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 247.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ἰσχίον, ἰσχιαδικος; ischiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischiadick passion is the gout in the hip, or the sciatica.

I'SCHURY. n. s. [ἰσχυρία, ἴσχω, and οὖρον, urine; ischurie, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURE'TICK. n. s. [ischuretique, Fr. from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISH. [ıſc, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as, fool, foolish; man, mannish; rogue, roguish.

I'SICLE. n. s. [more properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; ıſ, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?
—— The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow
Hanging on Dian's Temple. Shakspeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

I'SINGLASS. n. s. [from ice, or ise, and glass; ichthyocolla, Lat.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue. The fish from which isinglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill, Mat. Med.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrassating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer, Husbandry.

I'SINGLASS Stone. n. s. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany.
Hill, Mat. Med.

I'SLAND. n. s. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple. —— And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid the subject seas. Thomson.

I'SLANDER. n. s. [from island. Pronounced ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men.
Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakspeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse, with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison, Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boisterous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope, Odyss.

I'SLANDY.* n. s. [from island.] Full of, or belonging to, islands. Not now in use.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

ISLE. n. s. [isle, French; insula, Lat. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allee, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isles and intermingled graves,
Black Melancholy sits. Pope.

I'SLET.* n. s. [islette, French, from isle; so the old Fr. insulette, from insule.] A little island.

They — agreed to convey themselves and their substance into the uttermost bosom of the Adriatick gulf, and there possessed certain desolate islets, by tradition, about seventy in number. Wotton, Rem. p. 251.

I'SOLATED.* adj. [isolé, French. At first a term of architecture; for standing by itself. "The affected, frenchified, and unnecessary word isolated is not English, and we trust never will be." British Critic, Oct. 1800. The writer of the preceding remark had forgotten, or knew not, that the word had been then in use nearly half a century. Lord Chesterfield somewhere uses it. It will be sufficient, in proof of my assertion, to cite bishop Warburton; but I fully agree with the writer in considering it as a most affected word.] Detached; separate.

Short, isolated sentences were the mode in which ancient wisdom delighted to convey its precepts for the regulation of human conduct. Warburton, Doctrine of Grace, Pref.

ISO'CHRONAL.* adj. [isochrone, Fr. ἴσος, equal, and χρόνος, time, Gr.] Having equal times.

The isochronal velocities describing the particles of MN.
Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 41.

ISOPERIME'TRICAL. adj. [ἴσος, περὶ, and μέτρον.] In geometry, isoperimetrical figures, are such as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n. s. [isoscele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal.
Harris.

I'SSUABLE.* adj. [from issue, in law.] So as to bring to issue, or decision.

If a prisoner shall stand as contumacious in contempt, and shall not put in an issuable plea, guilty or not guilty of the charge given against him, whereby he may come to a fair trial; that, as by an implicit confession, may be taken "pro confesso." Narrative of the Trial of K. Ch. I. Jan. 25. 1648, p. 4.

Hilary and Trinity terms, from the making up of the issues therein, are usually called issuable terms. Blackstone.

I'SSUE. n. s. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Ps. lxviii. 20.

Let us examine what bodies touch a movable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the Atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakspeare, Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. St. Matt. ix. 20.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton, P. L.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was bless'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden, Æn.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowel.

To I'SSUE. v. n. [from the noun; isser, Fr. uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek. xlvii. 1.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Ralegh, Hist.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton, P. L.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakspeare.

To see that none thence issue forth a spy. Milton, P. L.

Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope, Odyss.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings, xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarages issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe, Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes, made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon.

To I'SSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a particle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryden.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe, Parergon.

I'SSUED.* part. adj. [from issue.] Descended.

His only heir
And princess: no worse issued. Shakspeare, Tempest.

I'SSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

I have done sin;
For which the Heav'ns, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

I'SSUING.* n. s. [from issue.] The act of passing or going out.

By some others affected, and interpreted, as issuings forth, or sallies of zeal. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 360.

I'STHMUS. n. s. [isthmus, Lat.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys, Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT.† pronoun. [hea, hit, Saxon; hit, Danish; het, Dutch; hitt, Iceland. ita, Gothick. It is supposed by Mr. H. Tooke to be the past participle of the Goth. haitan, Sax. hætan, to name, and so equivalent to the said. But this etymon is doubted by Dr. Jamieson, on this solid ground, "that the analogy is lost, as to the supposed participle, when the particles are compared. For what is hit, hyt, in Sax. is in the M. Goth. ita."]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addison, Freeholder.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
—— Even so
As with a man by his own alms impoison'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis. Mr. Malone notices, with me, a very early example of this usage in the Comedy of Fair Em, written about 1590, which one is led to suppose had caught the eye of Pope. See the last of the examples in the present sense.

Let mistress Nice go saint it, where she list,
And coyly quaint it with dissembling face. Fair Em.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Ralegh.

The Lacedemonians, at the streights of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison, Spect.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakspeare, K. John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shakspeare, Coriol.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITA'LIAN.* n. s.

1. A native of Italy.

As mirth is more apt to make proselytes than melancholy, it is observed that the Italians have many of them for these late years given very far into the modes and freedoms of the French. Addison, Remarks on Italy.

2. The Italian language.

Speak Italian, right or wrong, to every body; and if you do but laugh at yourself first for your bad Italian, nobody else will laugh at you for it. Ld. Chesterfield.

ITA'LIAN.* adj. Relating to the manners, customs, language, or persons of Italy.

The Italian proverb says of the Genoese, that they have a sea without fish, land without trees, and men without faith. Addison on Italy.

To ITA'LIANATE.* v. a. [from Italian.] To make Italian; to render conformable to Italian custom or fashion.

Another chops in with English italianated, and applieth the Italian phrase to our English speakyng. Wilson, Arte of Rhetorike, (1553,) B. 3.

Our Englishmen italianated have more in reverence the Triumphes of Petrarche than the Genesis of Moyses.
Ascham, Schoolmaster, (1589.)

Our italianated mountebanks seek to salve it.
Dean King, Serm. 5. Nov. 1608, p. 31.

To ITA'LIANIZE.* v. n. [italianizer, Fr.] To speak Italian; to play the Italian.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To ITA'LICISE.* v. a. [from Italick.] To distinguish a word by printing it in the Italick character. See ITALICK.

In p. 17. of his pamphlet the doctor has printed, but not italicised, another inaccuracy.
Dr. Parr on Dr. Combe's Statement, p. 78.

ITA'LICK.* adj. Denoting a type first used by Italian printers, and now usually employed to distinguish a particular word or sentence; as each word, illustrated in the examples given in this Dictionary, is printed. It is common also to say, substantively, the passage is printed in Italicks.

ITCH. n. s. [ȝicha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and Liberty
Creep in the mind, and marrows of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains.
Shakspeare, Timon.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Deut. xxviii. 27.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teazing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wiseman, Surgery.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace. —— Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakspeare.

Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Chr. Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

I'TCHY.† adj. [from itch.]

1. Infected with the itch.

This man, that is alone a king in his desire,
By no proud ignorant lord is basely overaw'd,
Nor his false praise affects, who, grossly being claw'd,
Stands like an itchy moyle. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

2. Having a constant teazing desire.

The hydropick drunkard, and knight-scouting thief,
The itchy lecher, and self-tickling proud.
Donne, Poems, p. 318.

I'TEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

I'TEM. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakspeare.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanville.

To I'TEM.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make a memorandum of.

Abig. I have always taken your part before my lady.
Vel. You have so, and I have item'd it in my memory.
Addison, Drummer.

I'TERABLE.* adj. [from To iterate.] Capable of being repeated.

Others may wonder how the curiosity of elder times, having this opportunity of his [Apollo's] answers, omitted natural questions; or how the old magicians discovered no more philosophy; and, if they had the assistance of spirits, could rest content with the bare assertions of things, without the knowledge of their causes; whereby they had made their acts iterable by sober hands, and a standing part of philosophy.
Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 178.

I'TERANT. adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To I'TERATE. v. a. [itero, Lat.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all; this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadours to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon, Hen. VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Ashes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milton, P. L.

ITERA'TION. n. s. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakspeare.

My husband!
—— Ay, 'twas he that told me first.
—— My husband!
—— What needs this iteration, woman?
I say, thy husband. Shakspeare, Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon, Ess.

In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

I'TERATIVE.* adj. [iteratif, Fr. from iterate.] Repeating; redoubling. Cotgrave.

ITI'NERANT. † adj. [itinerant, Fr.]

1. Travelling.

He [Edgar] usually rode the circuit as a judge itinerant through all his provinces. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

2. Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison, Spect.

ITI'NERARY. † n. s. [itineraire, Fr. itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels. Huloet.

Of what importance Julius Cæsar, Antonine, and the other emperors held these descriptions, is manifest by their very own itineraries yet to be seen. Gregory, Posthum. p. 329.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITI'NERARY. † adj. [itineraire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Four months I allow for itinerary removals. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 174.

This itinerary preaching. Milton, Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church.

To ITI'NERATE.* v. n. [itineror, itineratus, Latin.] To journey. Cockeram.

ITSE'LF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JUB.* n. s. [our old word for jug, apparently.] A bottle; a vessel. Not now in use. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

With him he brought a jubbe of Malvesie,
And eke another ful of fine Vernage. Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

JU'BILANT. † adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milton, P. L.

The tone of sorrow is mournful and plaintive; the notes of joy, exulting and jubilant. Bp. Horne, Occas. Serm. p. 268.

JUBILA'TION. † n. s. [jubilation, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

Sounding the trumpet of a thankful jubilation. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 257.

Well therefore may we, may the whole world, in consideration of our being under so good a government, be excited to joy and jubilation with the Psalmist. Barrow, ii. 11.

Praise and thanksgiving, jubilations, and hallelujahs, — are yet as pleasing a work to God as any other. South, Serm. iii. 425.

JU'BILEE. n. s. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels uttering joy, heaven rung
With jubilee, and loud hosannas fill'd
The eternal regions. Milton, P. L.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing: the recreation of the judgement, or rejoicing, the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.

JUCU'NDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new, unusual, or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves — will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

JUDA'ICAL.* adj. [from Judah.] Jewish; belonging to Jews.

Pride of every kind, and in every shape, exalting itself whether in judaical pharisaism, or gentile philosophy, against the knowledge of God, shall be made low, and subdued to the obedience of Christ. Bp. Horne, Consid. on St. John the Bapt. § 4.

Of the Paraphrase on Isaiah nothing very favourable can be said. Sublime and solemn praise gains little by a change to blank verse; and the paraphrast has deserted his original, by admitting images not Asiatick, at least not Judaical. Johnson, Life of Fenton.

JUDA'ICALLY.* adv. [from judaical.] After the Jewish manner.

Celebrating their Easter judaically. Milton, Of Prelat. Episcopacy.

JU'DAISM.* n. s. [from Judah.] The religion of the Jews.

Nicholas Lira — was born at Lira in Brabant, from whence he had his name, and where he was converted from Judaism to Christianity. Bp. Cosin, Canon of Script. p. 176.

For aught I see, though the Mosaical part of Judaism be abolished amongst Christians, the Pharisaical part of it never will. South, Serm. ii. 391.

The alcoran is but a system of the old Arianism, ill digested and worse put together, with a mixture of some Heathenism and Judaism. Leslie, Truth of Christianity Demonstr

JUDAS Tree. n s. [siliquastrum, Lat.] A plant.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the Spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To JU'DAIZE. v. n. [judaiser, Fr. judaizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all. Sandys.

JU'DAIZER.* n. s. [from To judaize.] One who conforms to the manners or rites of the Jews.

The judaizers maintained their opinions in a direct opposition to the authority that was lodged with the apostles. Bp. Burnet, Visit. Serm. 1704, p. 34.

JU'DDOCK.* n. s. A small snipe, so called in some places; what by others is termed the jack snipe.

JUDGE. n. s. [juge, Fr. judex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Gen. xviii. 25.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation. Ps. x. 18.

Thou art judge
Of all things made, and judgest only right. Milton, P. L.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

How dares your pride,
As in a listed field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit judge himself. Sherlock.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

To JUDGE. v. n. [juger, Fr. judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; — the Lord judge between thee and me. Gen. xvi. 5.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgement. 2 Chron. xix. 6.

2. To form or give an opinion.

Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shakspeare.

Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they choose. Milton, P. L.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job, xxii. 13.

How properly the tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

To JUDGE. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.

Chaos [shall] judge the strife. Milton, P. L.

Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the Scriptures.

He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Ps. cx. 6.

Judge not, that ye be not judged. St. Matt. vii. 1.

Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col. ii. 16.

JU'DGEMENT.† n. s. [jugement, Fr. "Sometimes it [the letter e] has no other effect than that of softening a preceding g: as lodge, judge, JUDGEMENT." Lowth, English Grammar.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgement! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgement, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgement.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgement only doth belong to thee. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgement upon him. 2 Kings, xxv. 6.

When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgement on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison, Spect.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgement is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville, Scepsis.

We shall make a certain judgement what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet, Theory.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgement, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgements as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see men's judgements are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgement was as fair as you. Shakspeare.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgement, he was stirr'd
With agony. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgement against him. Acts, xxv. 15.

On Adam last this judgement he pronounc'd. Milton, P. L.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgement was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Rom. v. 16.

JU'GGLER. n. s. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspeare.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Crœsus, and a notable juggler. Sandys, Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know. Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison, Freeholder.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat, a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stolen my love's heart from him? Shakspeare.

I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

JU'GGLING.* n. s. [from juggle.] Deception; imposture.

All superstitions being in effect but jugglings.
Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 89.

JU'GGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JU'GULAR. adj. [jugulum, Lat.] Belonging to the throat.

A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck. Wiseman, Surgery.

JUICE.† n. s. [jus, Fr. juys, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — To this may be added the Iceland. juck, juice; and the Lat. succus; and particularly the Celt. jus. This old English word is sometimes written jus or juse; and is pronounced joice in some parts.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts, Logick.

Of herbes of all the best juse. Gower, Conf. Am.

Thy baths shall be the juice of July-flowers. B. Jonson, Fox.

Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

An animal whose juices are unsound can never be nourished; unsound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbuthnot.

Ju'iceless.† adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

My joyceless corps shall yield up banish'd breath.
Trag. Hist of Rom. and Juliet, (1562.)

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass. More against Atheism.

When Boreas' spirit blusters sore,
Beware th' inclement heav'ns; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs. Philips.

Ju'iciness.† n. s. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence. Sherwood.

Ju'icy. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Each plant and juiciest gourd will pluck. Milton, P. L.

The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

Juise.* n. s. [low Lat. juisium, a word occurring in old charters; from jus.] Judgement; justice. Obsolete.

See the vengeance of his juise. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

Ju'jub.† } Ju'jubes. } n. s. [zizyphus, Lat.] A plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Miller.

With her the jujube tree, a milder plant,
Which (though offensive thorns she does not want)
In peace and mirth alone does pleasure take?
Her flow'rs at feasts the genial garlands make,
Her wood the harp, that keeps the guests awake.
Tate's Cowley.

To Juke.† v. n. [jucher, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — huka, Su. Goth. avium more reclinare. Serenius.]

1. To perch upon any thing, as birds.
2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

Ju'lap. n. s. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.]

Julap is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone. Quincy.

Behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt. Milton, Comus.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorificks and cordials expel the venom, and contemporate the heat and acrimony by juleps and emulsions. Wiseman, Surgery.

Ju'lian.* adj. Denoting the old account of the year, so called from Julius Cæsar, and used among us in England till 1752; when the Gregorian was adopted. See Gregorian.

The flood came upon the earth anno 1656 of the creation, and 2420 of the Julian period. Gregory, Posthum. p. 174.

Ju'lus. n. s. [ἴουλος, Gr.] Among botanists, the iulus denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hasels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

Ju'ly.† n. s. [Julius, Lat. juillet, Fr. We now usually pronounce the word with the accent on the last syllable; but formerly it was on the first, as Dr. Johnson has placed it.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh Month from January.

Then came hot July boiling like to fire. Spenser, F. Q.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peacham.

Ju'ly-flower.* n. s. What is commonly called the gillyflower. See Gillyflower.

Thy baths shall be the juice of July-flowers,
Spirit of roses, and of violets. B. Jonson, Fox.

JU'MART. n. s. [French.] Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jombre, from combler,' Fr. Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of Scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy Scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope, Dunciad.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

To Ju'mble. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

Ju'mble. n. s. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

Ju'mbler.* n. s. [from jumble.] One who mixes things together confusedly and disorderly. Sherwood.

Ju'ment.† n. s. [jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beast of burthen.

They did as much excel men in dignity, as we do juments.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 42.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To JUMP. v. n. [gumpen, Teut.]

1. To leap; to skip; to move without step or sliding.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless, quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.

So have I seen from Severn's brink
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympick games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Collier.

We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator.

3. To jolt.

The noise —— of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nah. iii. 2.

4. To agree; to tally; to join.

Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shakspeare.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shakspeare, Othello.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous nations. Shakspeare.

Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius. Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.

Good wits jump, and mine the nimbler of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine! Dryden.

I am happier for finding our judgements jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.

To JUMP.† v. a. To venture on inconsiderately; to risk; to hazard.

Here, upon this bank and shoal of time, —
We'd jump the life to come. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

You that will be less fearful than discreet;
—————————— that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physick
That's sure of death without it. Shakspeare, Coriol.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or centre wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers. Hooker.

But since so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakspeare, Othello.

JUMP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip; a bound.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.

2. A chance; hazard.

Do not exceed
The prescript of this scrowl: our fortune lies
Upon this jump. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

It [ellebore] putteth the patient to a jumpe, or great hazard. Holland, Transl. of Pliny's Nat. Hist. B. 25. ch. 5.

3. [Jupe, French.] A waistcoat; a kind of loose or limber stays worn by sickly ladies; a short coat. In Lancashire, a jump is a coat. See JIPPO.

The Scotch jump is looked upon as the more military fashion. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 119.

Even the bedel of the beggars, without his blue jump and silver-head tipstaff, loses reputation among the boys and vagrants! Gayton on D. Quix. p. 252.

The weeping cassock scar'd into a jump,
A sign the presbyter's worn to the stump. Cleaveland.

JU'MPER.* n. s. [from jump.] One that jumps or leaps. Sherwood.

The popes are pleased to juggle, as the fellow used to do, who bragged how far he could jump at Rhodes, where he knew no man had seen him. — There only my jumpers can work wonders. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674,) p. 229.

JU'NCATE.† n. s. [gioncata, Italian; joncade, French; which Cotgrave renders "spoon-meat made of cream, rose-water, and sugar;" and jonchée, following it, "fresh cheese made of milk that's curdled without any runnet, and served in a frail of green rushes," i. e. the Fr. joncs. Here is our cheesecake, and the origin of the word.]

1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and sugar.

When lads and lasses merry be
With possets and with juncates fine;
Unseene of all the company,
I eat their cakes and sip their wine.
Old Song of Rob. Goodfellow, Percy's Rel. Anc. Poetry.

With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab the juncates eat. Milton, L'All.

2. Any delicacy.

A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser.

It may indeed for a few days feed us with some painted juncates, and afterwards send us empty away. Hartlib, Ref. of Schools, (1642,) p. 53.

3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use. See JUNKET.

JU'NCOUS. adj. [junceus, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.

JU'NCTION. n. s. [jonction, Fr.] Union; coalition.

Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.

JU'NCTURE. n. s. [junctura, Lat.]

1. The line at which two things are joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtile nature, which being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the distillatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those grisly junctures. More.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Union; amity.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. King Charles.

4. A critical point or article of time.

By this profession in that juncture of time, they bid farewel to all the pleasures of this life. Addison.

When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison, Freeholder.

JUNE. n. s. [Juin, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacham.

JU'NIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools, my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.

According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler.

Ju'niper. n. s. [juniperus, Lat.] A tree.

A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wiseman.

Junk.† n. s. [probably an Indian word.]

1. A small ship of China, Dr. Johnson says; and so the example, which he brings from Bacon, serves to shew: but it is also used for a large ship.

America, which have now but junks and canoes, abounded then in tall ships. Bacon, New Atlantis.

This storm forcing a Malabar junk, a pirate, in view of us; whom our ordnance could not reach. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 41.

The ship, or junk, (for so it is called,) that usually goes from Surat to Moha is of an exceeding great burden; some of them, I believe, fourteen or fifteen hundred tuns, or more; but those huge vessels are very ill built. Terry, Voyage to the E. Ind. (1655,) p. 137.

2. Pieces of old cable.

JU'NKET n. s. [properly juncate. See Juncate.]

1. A sweetmeat.

You know, there wants no junkets at the feast. Shakspeare.

2. A stolen entertainment.

To Ju'nket. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.

Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night. Swift.

2. To feast.

Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South.

The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. South.

Ju'nta.† } n. s. [junta, Spanish. Our word was Ju'nto. } at first juncto, from the Lat. junctus, united. Dr. Johnson notices only junto.]

1. A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

The juncto had run to the length of their line; that is, as far as their master would permit them. Glanville, Serm. p. 171.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality? South.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. A congress of statesmen; a council.

Some principal soldiers, upon account of their merit or experience, were wont to assist at the juntas. Townsend, Conq. at Mexico, iii. 18.

The senate [of Venice] consists of a hundred and twenty nobles, one half of whom are ordinary, and the other distinguished by the appellation of the junta. Drummond, Trav. p. 61.

I'VORY. n. s. [ivoire, Fr. ebur, Lat.]

Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour: it is the dens exertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance. Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd iv'ry this, that of transparent horn:
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd iv'ry pass deluding lies. Dryden, Æn.

I'vory.* adj. Made of ivory.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham on Drawing.

From their ivory port the cherubim

Ju'piter.* n. s. One of the planets.

Jupiter revolves round the sun between Mars and Saturn. Adams.

Juppo'n.† n. s. [jupon, Fr.] A short close coat. Written also gipon, jippo, juppa, and jump. See Jippo, and Jump.

Of fustian he weared a gipon. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Some wore a breast-plate and a light juppon,
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryden.

Little men in red or blue juppas. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 378.

JU'RAT.† n. s. [juratus, Lat. juré, Fr.] A magistrate in some corporations, Dr. Johnson says; which Cowel tells us is in the nature of an alderman; as the mayor and jurats of Maidstone, &c. So in French, "jurats de Bourdeaux." Cotgrave. Originally, however, this word was applied to any person sworn to a particular purpose, juratus.

Witnesses and jurates, which shall proceede in the tryall, do make no lesse othe: but do openly renounce the helpe of God and his saintes, and the benefit of his passyon, if they saye not true, as far forth as they know. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 161. b.

Ju'ratory. adj. [juratoire, Fr. juro, Lat.] Comprising an oath.

A contumaceous person may be compelled to give juratory caution de parendo juri. Ayliffe, Parergon.

JURI'DICAL.† adj. [juridicus, Lat. juridique, Fr.]

1. Acting in the distribution of justice.

All discipline is not legal, that is to say juridical, but some is personal, some economical, and some ecclesiastical. Milton, Colasterion.

2. Used in courts of justice.

According to a juridical account and legal signification, time within memory, by the statute of Westminster, was settled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the First. Hale, Com. Law of England.

Juri'dically. adv. [from juridical.] With legal authority; according to forms of justice.

Ju'risconsult. n. s. [juris consultus, Lat.] One who gives his opinion in cases of law.

JURISDI'CTION. n. s. [jurisdictio, Lat. jurisdiction, Fr.]

1. Legal authority; extent of power.

Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through errour even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is. Hooker.

You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shakspeare.

All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office. Hayward.

This place exempt
From Heaven's high jurisdiction. Milton.

As Adam had no such power as gave him sovereign jurisdiction over mankind. Locke.

This custom in a popular state, of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's chusing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person. Swift.

2. District to which any authority extends.

Jurisdi'ctional.* adj. [from jurisdiction.] According to legal authority.

Anciently there were no appeals, properly so called, or jurisdictional, in the church. Barrow, Works, i. 249.

JURISDI'CTIVE.* adj. [from jurisdiction.] Having jurisdiction.

That jurisdictive power in the church. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

JURISPRU'DENCE.† n. s. [jurisprudence, Fr. jurisprudentia, Lat.] The science of law.

The talents of Abelard were not confined to theology, jurisprudence, philosophy, and the thorny paths of scholasticism: he gave proofs of a lively genius, by many poetical performances. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

Aristotle himself has said, speaking of the laws of his own country, that jurisprudence, or the knowledge of those laws, is the principal, and most perfect branch of ethics. Blackstone.

JURISPRU'DENT.* adj. [Lat. jurisprudens.] Understanding law.

Puffendorff, a very jurisprudent author. West to Gray, Lett. dat. 1738.

JU'RIST. n. s. [juriste, Fr. jura, Lat.] A civil lawyer; a man who professes the science of the law; a civilian.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bacon.

JU'ROR. n. s. [juro, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser on Ireland.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JU'RY. n. s. [jurata, Lat. jurée, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, by the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgement. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, impannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgement passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowel.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two
Guiltier than him they try. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakspeare.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JU'RYMAN. n. s. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single juryman, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JU'RYMAST.† n. s. It seems to be properly durée mast, mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizzen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

It has been also thought that the Norman Fr. jur, jura, a day, might give rise to this word; implying a temporary mast, a mast for a day.

JUST.† adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat. The past participle of jubere, to command, as Mr. H. Tooke thus speciously contends. "A right and just action is such a one as is ordered and commanded. A just man is such as he is commanded to be, qui leges juraque servat, who observes and obeys the things laid down and commanded." Divers. of Purley, vol. ii. p. 9. — "In reply to the objection, that, according to this doctrine, every thing that is ordered and commanded is right and just, Mr. Tooke not only admits the consequence, but considers it as an identical proposition: It is only affirming, he observes, that what is ordered and commanded is — ordered and commanded!" Dugald Stewart's Philosoph. Essays, p. 165. This however requires an admission, that the nature of the thing itself must depend upon its etymology, or that the obligation of subjection to the commanding or governing power must be conceded. From this dilemma Mr. Tooke endeavours to extricate himself by a distinction "between what is ordered by human authority, and what the laws of our nature teach us to consider as ordered by God." And thus, in the choice of obedience, a man must occasionally disregard what is ordered by one authority. In short, "in the present instance, Mr. Tooke has availed himself of a philological hypothesis to decide, in a few sentences, and, in my opinion, to decide very erroneously, one of the most important questions connected with the theory of morals." Dugald Stewart, p. 166.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.

Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephah. Lev. xix.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

Just of thy word, in every thought sincere,
Who knew no wish but what the world might hear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encountering on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' the stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts, Logick.

5. Virtuous: innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job, ix. 2.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov. xxiv. 16.
He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. St. Luke, xiv. 14.
The just the unjust to serve. Milton, P. L.

6. True; not forged.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.

Me though just right
Did first create your leader. Milton, P. L.

8. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompence of reward. Heb. ii. 2.
Whose damnation is just. Rom. iii. 8.

As Hesiod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a most just and glad increase it yields. Denham.

9. Complete without superfluity or defect.

He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon, Hen. VII.

10. Regular; orderly.

When all
The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies? Shakspeare.

12. Full; of full dimensions.

His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Knolles, Hist.

Their names alone would make a just volume. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 653.

There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale, Orig. of Mank.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutchess of Newcastle.

JUST. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as she spoke,
Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.

A few understanding him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.

'Tis with our judgements as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The Nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft Etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. s. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Joust is more proper. See JOUST.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and launce. Sidney.

What news? hold those justs and triumphs? Shakspeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French. See To JOUST.]

1. To engage in a mock fight: to tilt.
2. To push; to drive; to justle.

JU'STICE.† n. s. [Sax. ɪuſtɪce, Sax. Chron. justice, French; justitia, Lat.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.
3. Vindicative retribution; punishment: opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.
Let justice overtake us. Isa. lix. 9.
Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon's Ad. to Villiers.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgement. Cowel.

And thou, Esdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras, viii. 23.

6. JU'STICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banquo Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

7. JU'STICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

8. JU'STICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

9. JU'STICES of Assize. [justiciarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowel.

10. JU'STICES in Eyre. [justiciarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.

11. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowel.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakspeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of proscription, wherein the emperour hath been judge and party, and hath justiced himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended, for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justiced by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEABLE.* adj. [from justice.] Liable to account in a court of justice.

Many petty kings of Gaul — were subject to their nobility, and justiceable by them. Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, (1603,) ch. 3.

JU'STICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER.† n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word, found in the law-books of elder times, viz. "justicers of the peace."

With what fear and astonishment did the repining offenders look upon so unexpected a justicer! Bp Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

Precelling his progenitors, a justicer upright. Warner, Albion's Eng. x. 54.

He was a good justicer. Harington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 110.

JU'STICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTI'CIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JUSTI'CIARY.* n. s. [justiciarius, low Lat.]

1. An administrator of justice.

The civil justiciary, who omitteth the performance of those good duties which the law requireth, is in a damnable condition. Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639,) p. 465.

They [the clergy] were — sometimes sheriffs of counties, and almost constantly the justiciaries of the kingdom, [an. 1162.] Burke, Abridgem. Eng. Hist. iii. 6.

2. One who boasts the justice of his own action; a self-appointed judge.

The devil is in full force to those that are justiciaries, trusting in their own works, or in the liberty of their own will. Dering on the Ep. to the Hebrews, (1576,) M. 8.

I believe it would be no hard matter to unravel, and run through, most of the pompous austerities, and fastings, of many religious operators and splendid justiciaries. South, Serm. ix. 146.

JU'STIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton, S. A.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown, Vulg. Err.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude: possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right: defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICA'TION. n. s. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton, P. L.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JU'STIFICATIVE.* adj. [justificatif, Fr.] Having power to justify; justifying; making right. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

JU'STIFICATOR. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Rom. iii. 26.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakspeare.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. St. Matt. xi. 19.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job, xxv. 4.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgement. Ecclus. xix. 25

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act or wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justify'd, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton, P. L.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts, xiii. 39.

To JU'STLE. v. n. [from just, jouster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance
Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nah. ii. 4.

Argo pass'd
Through Bosporus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton, P. L.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the slant lightning. Milton, P. L.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shewn. Dryden.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among the crowd. Swift.

To JU'STLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following; as, out, or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The surly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison, Guardian.

JU'STLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Shock; slight encounter.

Every little justle,
Which is but the ninth part of a sound thump. Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

All such as have been aggrieved by any ambiguous expression, accidental justle, or unkind repartee. Tatler, No. 250.

JU'STLING.* n. s. [from justle.] Shock; the act of rushing against each other.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings, and clashings, in nature. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

JU'STLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised that cannot justly be blamed; where there is no choice, there can be no blame, South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open sight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; the avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

The goddess, studious of her Grecians' fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. s. [from just.]

1. Justness; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things; and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made. Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shakspeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatic poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison, Guardian.

To JUT.† v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot. Dr. Johnson. — Not from shoot. See To JET.]

1. To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck and jutted to the sea. Dryden.

Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome on the Odyssey.

2. To run against; to but. Barret.

Oft the ram
And jutting steer drive their entangling horns
Through the frail meshes. Mason, Eng. Garden, B. 2.

To JU'TTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon, let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To JU'TTY.* v. n. To jut. See To JETTY.

JU'TTY.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That part of a building which shoots forward beyond the rest. See JETTEE.

No jutty, frieze, buttress,
Nor coigne of vantage. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. A kind of pier: a mole projected into the sea.

Maintenance of piers, jutties, walles, and bankes, against the rages of the sea. Acts, 1 Edw. VI. c. 14.

JUT-WINDOW.* n. s. [jut and window.] A window jutting from a building.

I fancied her like the front of her father's hall; her eyes were the two jut windows, and her mouth the great door. Congreve.

JU'VENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon, Essays.

JUVENI'LITY. n. s. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restauration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUXTAPOSI'TION.† n. s. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the act of placing together; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

By the adduction and juxtaposition of parallels, universally gleaned both from his poetry and prose, to ascertain his favourite words. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

The man who first invented the word above, must not only have distinguished, in some measure, the relation of superiority from the objects which were so related, but he must also have distinguished this relation from other relations, such as, from the relation of inferiority denoted by the word below, from the relation of juxtaposition, expressed by the word beside, and the like. A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

I'VY. n. s. [ıṗıȝ, ıuıȝ, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool; —
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me and be my love. Marlow.

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milton, P. L.

I'VYED.* adj. [from ivy.] Overgrown with ivy. A favourite epithet of modern poets.

Underneath the brow
Of ivyed cliffs, through many a winding path,
Many a low valley, and forsaken lawn,
I stray'd with my conductor. W. Richardson.

I'll seek some lonely church, or dreary hall,
Where fancy paints the glimmering taper blue,
Where lamps hang mouldering on the ivy'd wall,
And sheeted ghosts drink up the midnight dew. Smollet.

Repeated objects of his view,
The gloomy battlements, and ivy'd spires;
That crown the solitary dome, arise. Warton, Pleasures of Melancholy.

JY'MOLD. adj. See GIMMAL.

K

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shook, leek. The English [should] never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

To KABO'B.* See To CABOB.

KAIL.* n. s. [capl, Sax. caul, old Fr. See COLE.] A kind of cabbage.

KA'LOYER.* n. s. A monk of the Greek church. See CALOYER. Dr. Shaw calls the Presbyters of the monastery of St. Catherine at Mount Sinai kalories, Trav. p. 330. Ricaut writes the word in the same manner. Others write it caloyer, as Churchhill, Tournefort, &c. The doctor, Mr. Pegge observes, derives the word from καλόγερος, a good old man; but Mr. Pegge prefers καλλίεργος, one who performs good works. See Anon. ix. 93. It is probably from καλὸς, without any adjunct.

The second are habited like Greek kalories of that order. Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 424.

KAM.† adj. [Kam, in Erse, is squint-eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian; hence our English a-kimbo. Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam. Dr. Johnson. — kamm, or camm, Welsh, crooked. See CAMOUS.] Crooked.

Sicin. This is clean kam.
Brut. Merely awry. Shakspeare, Coriol.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The faction, is it not notorious?
Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

To KE'CKLE.† v. a. [perhaps from kughtlen, Teut. rotundare.] To defend a cable round with rope. Ainsworth.

KE'CKSY. n. s. [commonly kex, cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or kex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

KE'CKY. adj. [from kex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

To KEDGE. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the foresail, or fore-top-sail and mizzen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

KE'DGER.† n. s. [from kedge.]

1. A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

2. A fish-man. Yorkshire. Grose.

KE'DLACK. n. s. A weed among corn; charlock. Tusser.

KEECH.✱ n. s. [caicchio, Ital. a barrel.] A solid lump or mass.

I wonder,
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

A keech of tallow is the fat of an ox or cow rolled up by the butcher in a round lump, in order to be carried to the chandler. It is the proper word in use now. Bp. Percy, Note on Shakspeare.

KEEL. n. s. [cœle, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, Fr.] The bottom of the ship.

Portunus
Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew, Cosmol.

Your cable's burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous ent'ring at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles; which see.

To KEEL.† v. a. [celan, Saxon, to cool; "to kele or kelan, to make cold." Prompt. Parv.] To cool; to render cool. Dr. Johnson has been misled by Sir T. Hanmer in regard to the meaning of this word, which he confines to the kitchen; and has considered it as existing only in Shakspeare. It is one of our oldest words.

I shall lazar to the sende
With water on his finger ende,
Thyn hote tonge for to kele. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

And down on knees full humbly gan I knele,
Besechyng her my fervent wo to kele. Chaucer, Court of Love.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

These interposals of forbearance do but whet the appetite to a greater keenness of desire. South, Serm. vi. 436.

5. Acuteness of understanding.

To KEEP.✝ v. a. [cepan, kepan, Saxon; kepen, old Dutch. "In the English language we have two words, which add the idea of care or diligence to that of holding or possessing. These words are keep and save, which we perceive are the same words under different forms. On the word keep our etymologists supply us with a set of terms belonging to the same element, (C B, whence the Latin capio, to take hold, to contain, &c.) which may be found in Skinner; cepan, κίβιτις, (pera,) kepen, coop. — Kefes signifies in Persia and Arabic a coop or cage for birds. Under coop, in Junius, we find a Dutch expression, 'kuype der stad septa urbis;' and coop or cowp, vas, dolium. Hence is derived cooper, doliarius. Keep is sometimes used in the sense of restrain, confine; as, in the phrases, keep in, to keep a person to any business, &c. The commentators on Shakspeare will supply us with examples, in which keep is used in the sense of care for; and there is another signification of this word, still preserved in the phraseology of our university, [Cambridge,] in which it recurs to a different sense of the element, and has reference to an enclosure for the purpose of rest, habitation, &c." Whiter, Etymolog. Magn. p. 43.]

1. To retain; not to lose.

I kept the field with the death of some, and flight of others. Sidney.

During his studies and travels, he kept up a punctual correspondence with Eudoxus. Addison.

39. To KEEP under. To oppress; to subdue.

O happy mixture! whereby things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

Truth may be smothered a long time, and kept under by violence; but it will break out at last. Stillingfleet.

To live like those, that have their hope in another life, implies, that we keep under our appetites, and do not let them loose into the enjoyments of sense. Atterbury.

To KEEP.† v. n.

1. To care for; to regard. This old expression afterwards was amplified into take keep. See the substantive KEEP.

The wake-plaies ne kepe I not to say. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. To remain by some labour or effort in a certain state.

With all our force we kept aloof to sea,
And gain'd the island where our vessels lay. Pope, Odyssey.

3. To continue in any place or state; to stay.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eightscore hours? and lovers' absent hours!
O weary reckoning! Shakspeare, Othello.

I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended. Ruth, ii. 21.

The necessity of keeping well with the maritime powers, will persuade them to follow our measures. Temple.

On my better hand Ascanius hung,
And with unequal paces tript along:
Creusa kept behind. Dryden, Æn.

The goddess born in secret pin'd;
Nor visited the camp, nor in the council join'd;
But keeping close, his gnawing heart he fed
With hopes of vengeance. Dryden, Homer.

And while it keeps there, it keeps within our author's limitation. Locke.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies' and gamesters' company. Locke on Education.

There are cases in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

The endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, the contrary endeavours of the Trojan to keep out of reach, are the intrigue. Pope, View of Ep. Poetry.

4. To remain unhurt; to last; to be durable.

Disdain me not, although I be not fair:
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn! Sidney.

Grapes will keep in a vessel half full of wine, so that the grapes touch not the wine. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If the malt be not thoroughly dried, the ale it makes will not keep. Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. To dwell; to live constantly.

A breath thou art,
(Servile to all the skiey influences,)
That dost this habitation where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Knock at the study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge. Shakspeare.

Now turn, and view the wonders of the deep;
Where Proteus' herds and Neptune's orks do keep:
Where all is plough'd, yet still the pasture's green,
New ways are found, and yet no paths are seen. B. Jonson, Masques.

6. To adhere strictly: with to.

Did they keep to one constant dress, they would sometimes be in fashion, which they never are. Addison, Spect.

It is so whilst we keep to our rule; but when we forsake that we go astray. Baker on Learning.

7. To KEEP on. To go forward.

So chearfully he took the doom;
Nor shrunk, nor stept from death,
But, with unalter'd pace, kept on. Dryden.

8. To KEEP up. To continue unsubdued.

He grew sick of a consumption; yet he still kept up, that he might free his country. Life of Cleomenes.

9. The general idea of this word is care, continuance, or duration, sometimes with an intimation of cogency or coercion.

KEEP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The strongest part of the old castles: the donjon, as Grose calls it. See DONJON. Dr. Johnson overpasses this primary sense of the word.

The day prefixed being come, he took coach near the keep, a high mount, on which is a tower, built in the middleward betwixt the two great courts within the castle; a guard being made all along. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Charles I. p. 105.

The prison strong,
Within whose keep the captive knights were laid:
Was one partition of the palace-wall. Dryden.

2. Custody; guard; charge; care. From the preceding sense.

Pan, thou god of shepherds all,
Which of our tender lambkins takest keep. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Often he used of his keep
A sacrifice to bring,
Now with a kid, now with a sheep,
The altars hallowing. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Of nothing he takes keep. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Guardianship; restraint.

Youth is least looked into, when they stand in most need of good keep and regard. Ascham.

4. Condition: a colloquial expression; as, in good keep.

KE'EPER.✝ n. s. [from keep.]

1. A defender; a preserver; one who saves from harm.

The Lord himself is thy keeper; the Lord is thy defence upon thy right hand. Ps. cxxi. 5.

2. One who holds any thing for the use of another; one who has the charge or care of another; a guardian.

The good old man having neither reason to dissuade, nor hopes to persuade, received the things with the mind of a keeper, not of an owner. Sidney.

Am I my brother's keeper? Gen. iv. 9.

3. One who has prisoners in custody.

The keeper of the prison, call to him. Shakspeare.

The Lord was with Joseph, — and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison. Gen. xxxix. 21.

Io now
With horns exalted stands, and seems to lowe:
A noble charge; her keeper by her side
To watch her walks his hundred eyes apply'd. Dryden.
A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and water mix'd, with added store
Of opium; to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallowed unaware the sleepy draught. Dryden.

4. One who has the care of parks, or beasts of chase.

There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter,
Some time a keeper here in Windsor forest,
Doth all the winter-time, at still of midnight,
Walk round about an oak with ragged horns. Shakspeare.
The first fat buck of all the season's sent,
And keeper takes no fee in compliment. Dryden.

5. One that has the superintendence or care of any thing.

Hilkiah went unto Hildah, keeper of the wardrobe. 2 Kings, xxii. 14.

KE'EPER of the great seal. [custos magni sigilli, Lat.] Is a lord by his office, and called lord keeper of the great seal of England, and is of the king's privy-council, under whose hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the king. This lord keeper, by the statute of 5 Eliz. c. 18. hath the like jurisdiction, and all other advantages, as hath the lord chancellor of England. Cowel.

KE'EPERSHIP. n. s. [from keeper.] Office of a keeper.

The gaol of the shire is kept at Launceston: this keepership is annexed to the constableship of the castle. Carew.

KE'EPING.✱ n. s. [from keep.]

1. Charge; custody.

Let them that suffer according to the Will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing as unto a faithful Creator. 1 Pet. iv. 19.

A wise and a good man shall be satisfied from himself; his happiness is in his own keeping. South, Serm. iv. 360.

2. Care to preserve; preservation.

If God bestows upon us a blessing, we may be confident, that he looks upon it as worth our keeping. South, Serm. iv. 402.

3. Guard.

Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,
And ever ready for your foeman fell. Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 2.

KE'EPSAKE.✱ n. s. [keep and sake.] A gift in token of remembrance; to be kept for the sake of the giver.

KEG.✝ n. s. [caque, Fr. Mr. Tooke believes our word to be the past participle of the Sax. cæᵹᵹian, obserare. He would, of course, disdain to notice the Welsh cawg, a basin.] A small barrel, commonly used for a fish barrel.

KELL.✝ n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology; the Welsh caul, (probably, however, borrowed from our own caul,) is the first meaning. Serenius notices also the Icel. kil, "saccus, pera, scrotum."]

1. The omentum; that which inwraps the guts.

The very weight of bowels and kell, in fat people, is the occasion of a rupture. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. A child's caul. See the fourth meaning of CAUL. Barret.

A silly jealous fellow — seeing his child new born included in a kell, thought sure a Franciscan, that used to come to his house, was the father of it, it was so like a friar's cowl; and thereupon threatened the friar to kill him. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 617.

3. The chrysalis of a caterpillar.

Caterpillars' kells,
And knotty cobwebs. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

KELL.✝ n. s. A sort of pottage. Ainsworth. It is so called in Scotland, being a soup made of shredded greens. Dr. Johnson. I do not find this Scottish soup written otherwise than kail or kale. The Welsh, however, have cawl for broth or pottage: our northern counties, kale-pot.

KELP.✝ n. s. A sea-plant; a salt produced from calcined sea-weed.

In making alum, the workmen use the ashes of a sea-weed called kelp, and urine. Boyle on Colours.

Their rocks abound with kelp, a sea-plant, of which the ashes are melted into glass. They burn kelp in great quantities, and then send it away in ships, which come regularly to purchase them. Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

KE'LPY.✱ n. s. A supposed spirit of the waters in Scotland; of the origin of which term, Dr. Jamieson says, he can form no idea, unless it be originally the same with Alem. chalp, Germ. kalb, a calf; kelpy being described as a quadruped, and as making a loud bellowing noise; yet at the same time believed to have the form of a horse. He is here noticed, on account of the resemblance of his character to our own demon of the waters, Old Nick, famous for drowning not only men but ships. See NICK.

KE'LSON. n. s. [more properly keelson.] The wood next the keel.

We have added close pillars in the royal ships, which being fastened from the kelson to the beams of the second deck, keep them from settling, or giving way. Ralegh.

KE'LTER.✝ n. s. [kelter, to gird, Danish: "He is not in kelter; that is, he is not ready." Skinner. Upkilta, to truss, to tuck up, Su. Goth. Ihre. "Upkilta kona, colligatis vestibus mulier, quo paratior officiis obeundis fiat; et hinc verisimile est hoc Angl. kelter usurpari coepisse de eo, qui est in promtu." Serenius.] Order; ready or proper state. So in the north of England, in good kelter, that is, in good condition.

If the organs of prayer are out of kelter, — how can we pray? Barrow, Works, i. 71.

To KEMB. v. a. [cæmban, Saxon; kammen, German: now written, perhaps less properly, to comb.] To separate or disentangle by a denticulated instrument.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd and bath'd, and rubb'd and trim'd,
More sleek. B. Jonson.
Thy head and hair are sleek;
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

KE'MBO.* See KIMBO.

KE'MELIN.* n. s. [χειμήλιον, Gr. any household implement.] A brewer's vessel; a tub. Cockeram. In the north of England a kimlin.

A kneading trough, or elles a kemelyn. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

To KEN.† v. a. [cennan, Saxon; kennan, Dutch, to know: kaennan, Su. Goth. to instruct, and also to know.]

1. To see at a distance; to descry.

The shepherd's swayne you cannot well ken,
But it be by his pride, from other men.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.
If thou ken'st from far,
Among the Pleiads, a new-kindled star;
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.
We ken them from afar, the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms. Addison.

2. To know. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says. Both in this and in the preceding sense, ken is still used in the north of England.

'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait. Shakspeare.
Now plain I ken whence love his rise begun:
Sure he was born some bloody butcher's son,
Bred up in shambles. Gay, Pastorals.

To KEN.* v. n. To look round; to direct the eye to or from any object.

Up she gets, out she looks, listens and enquires, hearkens, kens; every man afar off is sure he, every stirring in the street! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 513.

At once, as far as angels ken, he views
The dismal situation, waste and wild. Milton, P. L.

KEN. n. s. [from the verb.] View; reach of sight.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
When from the mountain top Pisanio shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a ken. Shakspeare, Cymb.
It was a hill
Of paradise the highest; from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out to the amplest reach of prospect, lay.
Milton, P. L.
He soon
Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton, P. L.
Rude, as their ships, was navigation then;
No useful compass or meridian known:
Coasting they kept the land within their ken,
And knew the North but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.

KE'NDAL-GREEN.* n. s. A kind of green cloth, made at Kendal in Westmoreland; a place long distinguished for dying cloths with several bright colours. This sort of stuff is mentioned in a statute of king Richard the second. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, vol. iv. p. 40.

Three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal-green, came at my back, and let drive at me. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Now doth he inly scorne his Kendal-greene,
And his patch'd cockers now despised beene.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

KE'NNEL.† n. s. [chenil, Fr. Dr. Johnson.— From chien, Fr. a dog; canis, Latin. And our old word, for a kennel of hounds, is accordingly cannel. See Huloet's Dictionary.]

1. A cot for dogs.

A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kennel. Sidney.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakspeare.

The seditious remain within their station, which, by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might be more fitly termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakspeare.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.

4. [Kennel, Dutch; chenal, Fr. canalis, Lat.] The watercourse of a street.

A scavenger working in the canell.
Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 103.

The crosses also of certain brethren — they overthrew and laid flat with the cheynell.
A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. under the year 1354.

Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayward.

He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kennel at a boarding-school. Arbuthnot.

KE'NNEL *Coal. See CANAL Coal.

To KE'NNEL. v. n. [from kennel.] To lie; to dwell: used of beasts, and of man in contempt.

Yet, when they list, would creep,
If aught disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kennel there; yet there still bark'd and howl'd
Within, unseen. Milton, P. L.

The dog kennelled in a hollow tree, and the cock roosted upon the boughs. L'Estrange.

To KE'NNEL.* v. a. To keep in a kennel.

Pompey, a tall hound, kennelled in a convent in France; and knows a rich soil. Tatler, No. 62.

From their slumbers shook, the kennell'd hounds
Mix in the musick of the day again. Thomson, Autumn.

KE'NNING.* n. s. [from To ken.] View. Apparently a sea term.

The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land. Bacon.

His ships were past a kenning from the shore.
Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

KEPT. pret. and part. pass. of keep.

KERB.* n. s. [ceoppan, Sax. to cut; kerbe, Germ. notch, indent.] Any edging of strong solid stuff, which serves as a guard to something else. Thus the edging of the stone footways in London streets is called the kerb-stone.

[Elm] scarce has any superior for kerbs of coppers.
Evelyn, b. i. ch. 4. § 15.

KE'RCHIEF.† n. s. [covrecheif, Chaucer; couvre, to cover, and chef, the head; and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands. Dr. Johnson.— It should seem, from the following citation, that Chaucer's word was not what Dr. Johnson states it to be, but covercephe. "Among Latin and Greek words, by common usage taken for English, as fevre, &c. he mentions cephe, whereof cometh Chaucer's covercephe in the Romant of the Rose, written and pronounced commonly kerchief in the South, and courchief in the North." Caius's Counseille against the Sweate, 1552. fol. 10.]

1. A head dress of a woman.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arched bent of the brow, that becomes the tire vailant.

—— A plain kerchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

O! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To wear a kerchief. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The proudest kerchief of the court shall rest
Well satisfy'd of what they love the best. Dryden.

2. Any loose cloth used in dress.

Every man had a large kerchief folded about the neck. Hayward.

KE'RCHIEFED.† } adj. [from kerchief.] Dressed;
KE'RCHIEFT. } hooded.

Sickness with his kerchef'd head upwound. G. Fletcher. Christ's Vict. P. I. st. 12.

Thus, Night, oft seeme in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited Morn appear,
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont
With the Attick boy to hunt,
But kercheft in a comely cloud,
While rocking winds are piping loud. Milton, Il Pens.

KERF. n. s. [ceoꞃꝼan, Saxon, to cut.] The sawn-away slit between two pieces of stuff is called a kerf. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

KE'RMES.† n. s. [kermes, old Fr. But see ALKERMES.] Kermes is a roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crushed yield a scarlet juice. It till lately was understood to be a vegetable excrescence; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal parent, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill.

KERN.† n. s. [Neither Sir James Ware in his remarks on Ireland, nor Dr. Johnson in his notice of this word, offer any etymology. Stanihurst, in his old description of Ireland, has given the following: "Kerne (kigheyren) signifieth a shower of hell; because they are taken for no better than rake-hells, or the devil's black garde!" ch. 8. fol. 28. The Irish foot-soldier will not consider himself very highly obliged to master Stanihurst. Let him console himself, however, first, with honest Fuller's admirable remark on the Irish soldiery, in his account of the Holy War, made not long after that of Stanihurst: "All the consort of Christendome in this war could have made no musick, if the Irish harp had been wanting." Hist. of the Holy War, 1639. p. 269. Let him next apply this observation to the warfare of our own times, and then laugh at the fiery etymology ascribed to the name of his predecessors. Kelham, it may be added, notices the Norman Fr. kernes as meaning idle persons, vagabonds.] Irish foot soldier; an Irish boor.

Out of the fry of these rake-hell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern supplied. Spenser on Ireland.

Justice had with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping kernes to trust their heels. Shakspeare.

If in good plight these Northern kerns arrive,
Then does fortune promise fair. Philips, Briton.

KERN.† n. s. [querne, Teut. "hand-molen." Kilian.]

1. A hand-mill consisting of two pieces of stone by which corn is ground. It is written likewise quern. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.

2. A churn. See CHURN. "Kern-milk," Yorkshire; butter-milk.

3. KERN Baby. An image dressed up with corn, carried before the reapers to their harvest home; perhaps not yet discontinued in the northern parts of England. A corruption of corn-baby. See To KERN.

To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or, by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]

1. To harden as ripened corn.

When the price of corn falleth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, wherethrough it falleth out that an ill kerned or saved harvest soon emptieth their old store. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To take the form of grains; to granulate.

The principal knack is in making the juice, when sufficiently boiled, to kern or granulate. Grew.

KE'RNEL. n. s. [cyꞃnel, a gland, Saxon; kerne, Teut. cerneau, Fr.]

1. The edible substance contained in a shell.

As brown in hue
As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakspeare.

There can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Shakspeare, All's well.

The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. More.

2. Any thing included in a husk or integument.

The kernel of a grape, the fig's small grain,
Can cloath a mountain, and o'ershade a plain. Denham.

Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. The seeds of pulpy fruits.

I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the kernels continued white. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concreted.

A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arbuthnot.

5. Knobby concretions in children's flesh.

To KE'RNEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen to kernels.

In Staffordshire, garden-rouncivals sown in the fields kernel well, and yield a good increase. Mortimer, Husbandry.

KE'RNELLY.† adj. [from kernel.] Full of kernels; having the quality or resemblance of kernels. Sherwood.

KE'RNELWORT. n. s. [scrofularia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

KE'RSEY. n. s. [karsaye, Dutch; carisée, Fr.] Coarse stuff.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
I do forswear them; and I here protest,
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shakspeare.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The same wool one man felts it into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, and another into kersey or serge. Hale.

Thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
Drew Cic'ly's eye aside. Gay.

To KERVE.✱ v. a. [ceoꞃꝼan, Saxon.] To cut; to carve.

In that figure Plinius saw him kerved. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 57. b.

That else was like to sterve
Through cruell knife, that her deare hart did kerve. Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 4.

KE'RVER.✱ n. s. [from kerve. Norm. Fr. kerver. Kelham.] A carver.

Ne portreiour, ne kerver of images. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

KE'SAR.✱ n. s. [kaisar, Goth. Cæsar, Lat.] An emperour. Obsolete.

Whilest kings and kesars at her feet did them prostrate. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 29.

KEST.† The preter tense of cast. It is still used in Scotland.

The rosie mark, which she remembred well
That little infant had, which forth she kest. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 15.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest. Fairfax.

KE'STREL. n. s. A little kind of bastard hawk. Hanmer.

His kestrel kind,
A pleasing vein of glory, vain did find. Spenser, F. Q.
Kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.

KETCH.† n. s. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship; as a bomb ketch. Dr. Johnson gives as an example the passage from Shakspeare, which belongs to keech. A ketch is a vessel with two masts, usually from 100 to 250 tons burthen.

KE'TTLE.† n. s. [cetl, Saxon; ketel, Dutch; katila, Gothick.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden.

KE'TTLEDRUM. n. s. [kettle and drum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass, or copper.

As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

KE'TTLEPINS.* Ninepins; skittles. See KAYLE.

Billiards, kettle-pins, noddy boards, tables, truncks, shovel boards, fox and geese, or the like. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 340.

KEX.* n. s. [See KECKSY.]

1. Hemlock.
2. A dry stalk. The stem of the teasel. North. As dry as a kex. [from the Icel. queck, any thing that kindles; fuel.]

I bring with me a book as dry as a kex, void of invention, barren of good phrase. Shelton, Pref. to Transl. of Don Quixote.

KEY.† n. s. [cæᵹ, Sax. from cæᵹᵹian, to shut up. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.

If a man were porter of hellgate, he should have old turning the key. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The glorious standard last to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opes the palace of eternity. Milton, Comus.

Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South.

He came, and knocking thrice, without delay,
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.

Hide the key of the jack. Swift.

3. An explanation of any thing difficult.

An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.

These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.

Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Richardson, Pamela.

5. [In musick.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakspeare.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In sev'n short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakspeare.

6. [Kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.

A key of fire ran along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze. Dryden.

7. [In botany.] The husk containing the seed of an ash.

Ash, elm, tilia, poplar, hornbeam, &c. are distinguished by their keys, tongues, &c. small, flat, and husky skins including the seeds. Evelyn.

KE'YCOLD.† adj. [key and cold.]

1. Lifeless; formerly a common expression; now perhaps obsolete. A key, on account of the coldness of the metal of which it is made, was formerly and even yet is employed to stop a bleeding of the nose.

Such objections as protestants nowe, &c. kayecolde christians do make. Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 123. b.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster! Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I see zealous professors transformed to key-cold worldlings. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 323.

Her apostolick virtue is departed from her, and hath left her key-cold. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

2. Cold.

'Twixt sleep and wake,
I do them take,
And on the key-cold floor them throw.
Old Song of Rob. Goodfellow, Percy's Reliques.

KE'YAGE. n. s. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key, or quay. Ainsworth.

KE'YHOLE. n. s. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.

Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakspeare.

I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Tatler.

I keep her in one room; I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket;
The keyhole is that left? Most certain. Prior.

KE'YSTONE. n. s. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.

If you will add a keystone and chaptrels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

KHANE.* n. s. [A Turkish word.] A sort of house or place of general reception.

Here is a spacious vaulted bazar, and a noble khane. — A khane is commonly a square court, colonaded in the manner of Covent Garden; built in charity for the reception of strangers, as there are no inns in these countries. Drummond, Trav. p. 219.

KIBE. n. s. [from kerb, a cut, German, Skinner; from kibwe, Welsh, Minsheu.] An ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.

If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakspeare.

The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

One boasted of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wiseman.

KI'BED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes: as, kibed heels.

KI'BY.* adj. [from kibe.] Having kibes; sore with kibes.

He halteth often that hath a kyby heele. Skelton, Poems, p. 25.

To KICK.† v. a. [kauchen, German; calco, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Kuika, Iceland. Serenius. Chaucer writes our word kike.] To strike with the foot.

He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.

It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

Another, whose son had employments at court, valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.

To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.

Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Sam. ii. 29.

Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked. Deut. xxxii. 15.

The doctrines of the Holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillotson.

KICK. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.

What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,
Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryden, Juv.

KI'CKER.† n. s. [from kick.]

1. One who strikes with his foot.

2. A wincing horse. Huloet.

KI'CKSHAW.† n. s. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, some thing; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshoe, as if he thought it used in contempt of dancing. Dr. Johnson. — Milton's word, in the passage cited from the original edition of his Treatise on Education, is kicshoes; probably intended for kickshose, agreeably to the pronunciation of the French chose, as it had been used by Featley, a little before Milton: "I make bold to set on the board kicke-shoses, and variety of strange fruits." Dippers Dipt, 1645. p. 199.]

1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.

Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris to take our youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kicshoes. Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;
Cressy was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fenton.

KI'CKSY-WICKSEY. n. s. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hanmer.

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kicksy-wicksey here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms. Shakspeare.

KID. n. s. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Spenser, F. Q.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which sight sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging. Wotton.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

So kids and whelps their sires and dams express;
And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden, Virg.

2. [From cidweln, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

To KID.† v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth kids. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To KID.* v. a. [cyðan, Sax. to declare, to make known; kit, Teut. known.] To discover; to shew; to make known.

The fame, which maie nought be hid,
Throughout the londe is soone kid. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.
The sothfastnesse, that now is hid,
Without coverture shall be kid. Chaucer, Rom. R. 2172.
But, ah! unwise and witlesse Colin Cloute,
That kydst the hidden kindes of many a weede,
Yet kydst not ene to cure thy sore heart-roote.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

KI'DDED.* adj. [from the noun.] Fallen as a young kid. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

KI'DDER. n. s. An engrosser of corn to enhance its price. Ainsworth.

KI'DDLE.* n. s. [Norman Fr. kideux, kiddles, Kelham; kidellus, low Latin. The word is in Magna Charta.] A kind of wear in a river, to catch fish. Corruptly called, in some places, kittle or kettle.

KI'DDOW.* n. s. The most common English name of the Lomwia, a web-footed bird, common on our shores, and called in different places the guillemot or guillem, and the sea-hen, and skout. Chambers.

KI'DLING.* n. s. [from kid.] A young kid.

Mountains where the wanton kidling dallies. W. Browne.
Like kidlings blithe and merry. Gay.

To KI'DNAP.† v. a. [from kind, Dutch, a child, and nap.] To steal children; to steal human beings.

This poor child was kidnapped by the Jews.
Drummond, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1744,) p. 18.

The offence of kidnapping (being the stealing away) man, woman, or child, from their own country, and selling them into another, was capital by the Jewish law. Blackstone.

KI'DNAPPER. n. s. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spectator.

KI'DNEY.† n. s. [Etymology unknown. Dr. Johnson. — There is great probability in Serenius's derivation of our word from the Icel. quidr, Su. Goth. qued, the belly; and nigh. Our word might at first be quidney.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Sort; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KI'DNEYBEAN. n. s. [phaseolus. So named from its shape.] A leguminous plant.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer, Husbandry.

KI'DNEYVETCH. [anthillis.] } n. s. Plants. Ainsworth.
KI'DNEYWORT. [cotyledon.] }

KIE.* Kine. Our northern word. See also KEE, and KY.

KI'LDERKIN.† n. s. [Dutch, kindeken, a baby; "vasculum, dolium; octava pars cadi; quod eandem habeat rationem ad integrum dolium, quam infantulus ad hominem perfectum." Junius. Skinner accordingly denominates it the great cask's baby, "filiolus vasis majoris." Bishop Parker, who was Dryden's contemporary, writes our word, nearer to the Dutch, kinderkin.] A small barrel.

Make in the kilderkin a great bung-hole of purpose. Bacon.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ;
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

Many vessels of authority, some kinderkins, some hogsheads, some tuns. Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transpr. p. 11.

To KILL. v. a. [anciently quell; cwellan, Saxon; kelen, Dutch.]

1. To deprive of life; to put to death, as an agent.

Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
— Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Exod. xvi. 3.

There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Macc. v. 13.

2. To destroy animals for food.

We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and to kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shakspeare.

Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers? 1 Sam. xxv. 11.

3. To deprive of life, as a cause or instrument.

The medicines, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.

Try with oil, or balm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with spittle. Floyer on the Humours.

KI'LLER. n. s. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son. Sidney.

Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill
His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,
When couch'd in dreadful dens? Sandys.

So rude a time,
When love was held so capital a crime,
That a crown'd head could no compassion find,
But died, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

KI'LLOW. n. s. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as soot is thereby produced.]

An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the north, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN. n. s. [cyln, Saxon.] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

I'll creep up into the chimney. — There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln hole. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bushel in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To KI'LNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer, Husbandry.

KILT.† Used by Spenser for killed; not in the phrase of the Irish, for merely hurt, or wounded, but deprived of life.

But what art thou, that tell'st of nephews kilt? Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 26.

A horse, please your honour, that this man here sold me at the fair of Gurtishannon last Shrove fair — lay down three times with myself, and kilt me! Castle Rackrent, p. 206.

This word frequently occurs in the preceding pages, where it means not killed, but much hurt. In Ireland, not only cowards, but the brave, "die many times before their death!" Ibid. Gloss.

KI'MBO.† adj. [a schembo, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — See KAM. Serenius considers the Icel. kime, kimpell, ansa, the handle of a pot or jug, as likely to have suggested our word; and, in our old lexicography, the word is kembol, which Sherwood renders, in the following phrase, conformably to this etymon, "with arms set on kemboll, les bras courbez en anse." Others write our word kembo.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd,
And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden, Virg.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper; so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

KI'MNEL.* See KEMELIN.

KIN.† n. s. [cynn, Sax. kyn, Icel. kun, Gothick. Wicliffe writes our word kyn.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errours. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

The unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind, confound. Shakspeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborn by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind,
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,
A citizen of Heav'n, to earth confin'd. Davies.

4. The same generical class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst,
And the ear-deafening voice of the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alcalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin, thomkin, wilkin.

KIN.* adj. Of the same nature; congenial; kindred.

Some kin affray,
Envie, or pride, or passion, or offence.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

KIND. adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general good-will.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Some of the ancients, like kind-hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. St. Luke, vi. 35.

KIND-HEARTED.* adj. [kind and heart.] Having great benevolence; a frequent colloquial expression; as, a kind-hearted man.

The sea at last from Colchian mountains seen,
Kind-hearted transport round their captain's threw
The soldiers' fond embrace; o'erflow'd their eyes
With tender floods, and loos'd the general voice
To cries resounding loud — The sea, the sea!
Thomson, Liberty, P. ii.

KIND.† n. s. [kund, Gothick; from kun. See KIN.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonick English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hooker.

As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came summon'd over Eden, to receive
Their names of thee. Milton, P. L.

That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kind,
Specifick difference we find. Hudibras.

God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies.
South, Serm.

He with his wife were only left behind
Of perish'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

Some acts of virtue are common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than among the heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atterbury.

He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many. Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ, or tithes. Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. Nature; natural determination.

A monstrous cruelty 'gainst course of kind. Spenser, F. Q.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And, in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind t' admire your fellow creature. Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred.
Bacon, Ess.

6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.

KI'NDED.* part. adj. [cennan, Sax. to beget; from kind.] Begotten.

Though she still have worne
Her days in war, yet (weet thou) was not borne
Of bears and tygres, nor so salvage-mynded
As that, albe all love of men she scorne,
She yet forgets that she of men was kynded. Spenser, F. Q.

To KI'NDLE.† v. a. [Probably from the Welsh cynne, or cynneu, to light, to set on fire; Serenius notices also the Goth. kinda, accendere, kyndell, candela. But our old word was without the d, as in Gower's Conf. Am. B. 7. "Fire kenled." Then it became kendle, as in Barret's Alveary; and lastly kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it and baketh bread. Is. xliv. 15.

I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments.
King Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job, xix. 11.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.

3. [from cennan, Saxon.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.

Are you native of this place?
— As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled.
Shakspeare.

To KI'NDLE. v. n. To catch fire.

When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Is. xliii 2.

KI'NDLER.† n. s. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

By what equity is a publick rebellion commended in the kindlers of it, that it may be punished in the furtherers?
Bewailing of the Peace of Germany, (1635,) p. 47.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.

KI'NDLESS.* adj. [kind and less.] Unnatural.

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

KI'NDLINESS.* n. s. [from kindly.]

1. Favour; affection; good will.

In kinde a father, but not kindliness.
Sackville's Gorboduc, (1561.)

2. Natural disposition; natural course.

That mute kindliness among the herds and flocks.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

Fruits and corn are much advanced by temper of the air and kindliness of seasons. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 427.

KI'NDLY.† adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneal; congeneal; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.

These soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton, P. L.

2. Natural; fit; proper.

The earth shall sooner leave her kindly skill. Spenser, F. Q.
The kindly fruits of the earth. Litany.

3. The foregoing senses seem to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

4. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions dost thou move,
And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

Ye heavens, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r! Pope.

KI'NDLY.† adv. [from kind.]

1. Benevolently; favourably; with good will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakspeare.

I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Rom. xii. 10.

His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek. Prior.

Who, with less designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;
With goods words, and countenance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely. Swift.

2. Naturally; fitly. [from kind, the substantive.]

Like as men sow, such corne needs must they reape;
And nature planted so in each degree,
That crabs like crabs will kindly crawle and creepe. Mir. for Mag. p. 464.

This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs;
It will be pastime passing excellent. Shakspeare, Tam. of Shrew.

Examine how kindly the Hebrew manners of speech mix and incorporate with the English language. Addison, Spect. No. 405.

KI'NDNESS.† n. s. [from kind.]

1. Benevolence; beneficence; good will; favour; love.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier of Friendship.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers, Serm.

2. Benefit conferred.

KI'NDRED.† n. s. [from kin; cynpen, Saxon. Accordingly our old word was kinred. So Chaucer writes it; so our old lexicography gives it; and it continued to be used till late in the 17th century. " The boy is brought in by his father and kinred, in his new vest and turbant." Smith, Manners of the Turks, p. 40.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakspeare.

3. Relatives.

I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.

KI'NDRED. adj. Congeneal; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Coritum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.

KINE.† n. s. plur. from cow, that is, cowen.

To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne. B. Jonson.

A field I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.

KING. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonick word cuning, or cyning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Verstegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governour.

The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakspeare.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,
Till common interest plac'd the sway in one;
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a sire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.

A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.

To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

KI'NGAPPLE. n. s. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.

O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakspeare.

I, kinglike, sate, with armed troops inclos'd. Sandys, Job, p. 42.

Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come
To reverence thee. Dryden, State of Innocence.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common 'larum bell? Shakspeare.

Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shakspeare.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.

I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakspeare.

KI'NGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superiour dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state

His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with rev'rence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Pope, Dunciad.

KINGSE'VIL. n. s. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.

The salmon, after spawning, become very poor and thin; and they are called kipper. Pennant, Zool. iii. 242.

KIRN.* See KERN.

KIRK. n. s. [cyrce, Saxon; κυριακή, Gr.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Cleaveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KI'RKMAN.* n. s. [kirk and man.] One of the church of Scotland.

It [the king's declaration] in the month of July 1637 was publickly read in the great church of Edinburgh. The kirkmen took fire at it; nor wanted there some in England to fan the flame. Vindiciæ Carolinæ, (1692,) p. 37.

KI'RTLE.† n. s. [cyrtel, Saxon; kiortell, Iceland. Of old we find the same term applied to the gowns worn by the men. Thus Franco-Goth. "Ung altre lui vestira un kyrtel du rouge tartarin." V.

Du Cange, and Callander's Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 106. It was indeed the name of the surcoat at the creation of knights of the garter.] A gown; a jacket; a petticoat; a mantle; a cloak.

Damosellis two,
Right yong, and full of semelyhede,
In kirtils, and none other wede. Chaucer, Rom. R. 778.

All in a kirtel of a light waget. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Spenser, F. Q.

What stuff wilt have a kirtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday: thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Marlow.

Ki'rtled.* adj. [from kirtle.] Wearing a kirtle.

The flowery-kirtled Naiades,
Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs. Milton, Comus.

To KISS.† v. a. [Saxon, cyssan; Su. Goth. kyssa; Welsh, cusan; κύω, κύσω, Greek. Thus kuss is kiss, in some parts of the north of England. Chaucer writes it kess.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can miss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.

He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echoed. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shakspeare.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shakspeare.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Kiss. n. s. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakspeare, Othello.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing master's kit. Grew, Mus.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town. [kitte, kit, Dutch.]

4. A milking pail, like a churn, with two ears, and a cover. [kitte, Dutch, Ray; kuttr, "tonnula sex circitèr sextarios continens." Serenius.]

Ki'tcat.* adj.

1. Denoting a club of whigs at the beginning of the last century, of which Addison, Steele, and other distinguished wits were members; so named from Christopher Cat, a pastry-cook, who excelled in mutton pies, by whom the club was served with this part of the entertainment.

You have been for some years past laying the foundation of new schemes in your kit-cat clubs, calf's head clubs, juntos, and other infernal cabals of this kind! Acc. of Tom Whig, Esq. (1710,) p. 31.

Our modern celebrated clubs are founded upon eating and drinking. — The kit-cat itself is said to have taken its original from a mutton-pie. Addison, Spect. No. 9. (1710-11.)

2. Denoting a portrait, somewhat larger than a three quarter's, and less than a half length; so called from the room, in which portraits of the kit-cat club at first were placed, being not sufficiently lofty to admit half lengths.

There is a kit-cat size of St. Ignatius holding a crucifix, which is faint, but sweetly done. Drummond, Trav. p. 31.

KI'TCHEN. n. s. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cycene, Sax. cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; kyshen, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser on Ireland.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

Ki'tchengarden. n. s. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.

A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spectator.

Ki'tchenmaid.† n. s. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

Did not her kitchenmaid rail, taunt, and scorn me? Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Ki'tchenstuff. n. s. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry. Hudibras.

Ki'tchenwench. n. s. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shakspeare.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.

Ki'tchenwork. n. s. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

Kite. n. s. [cyta, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakspeare.

The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.

KITE.* n. s. [qued, Su. Goth. quidr, Icel. the belly.] In the north of England, the belly.

KI'TESFOOT. n. s. A plant. Ainsworth.

KITH.* n. s. [cyðe, knowledge, Saxon; cyðan, to make known.] Acquaintance. Obsolete. Bullokar.

And after that from kith and kynne,
With great treasore with hym she staye.
Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

KI'TTEN. n. s. [katteken, Dutch. It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten, or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.] A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wiseman.

Helen was just slipt into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay.
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KI'TTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.

KI'TTIWAKE.* n. s. A bird of the gull kind; common among the rocks of Flamborough head.

To KI'TTLE.* v. a. [citelan, Saxon, titillare.] To tickle. Common in the north of England. It is also in Sherwood's old dictionary.

KI'TLING.* n. s. [catulus, Lat.] A whelp; the young of all beasts. Barret, Alv. 1580. Now, a young cat or kitten.

Whither go you now?
What, to buy gingerbread, or to drown kitlings?
B. Jonson, Fox.

KIVE.* n. s. The tub-hole is a hollow place in the ground, over which the kive, (mashing-fat,) stands. Kelly's Scotch Proverbs, p. 300. cited by Dr. Jamieson, in his Scottish dictionary; who says, "I have not met with this word any where else." It appears, however, to be of English usage, and by an old author of great merit.

Lime, or calke which is strong lime, is used to accelerate the fermentation of the woad, which, by the help of the same pot-ashes and warm liquors kept always so, in three or four days will come to work like a kive of beer, and will have a blue or rather greenish froth or flowry upon it; answering to the yest of the kive.
Sir W. Petty, Hist. of Dying, Sprat's H. R. Soc. p. 301.

To KI'VER.* v. a. To cover. See To COVER. Mr. Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the English language, gives a catalogue of words, of which the use and pronunciation are deformed by the natives of London. Among these are kiver for cover; which, however, he might have defended by Chaucer's employment of kever, and by Huloet's introduction into his old dictionary of kiver, for the more modern cover.

To KLICK.† v. n.

1. To make a small sharp noise. [from clack.]

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch. Dr. Johnson. — It has the sense also of to catch up, to snatch, in the north of England.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so as that knab and knap may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNA'BBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw iron. Brown.

KNACK.† n. s. [cnapinge, skill, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — The word seems to have been formed, as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, from the knacking or snapping, of the fingers used by jugglers. See Cotgrave in V. NIQUET, viz. "a knick, klick, snap with the teeth or fingers; a trifle, bauble, matter of small value, &c." And in V. MATASSINER des mains, viz. to move, knack, or waggle the fingers, like a juggler, player, &c."]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

The more queint knakkes that they make.
Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

These knacks were brought first into England by them.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakspeare.

But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. B. Jonson.

The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK.† v. n. [knacken, Teut. frangere. And Barret defines our knack, "to break a nut." Alv. 1580.]

Knap a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. Wiseman.

KNA'PBOTTLE. n. s. [papaver spumeum.] A plant.

KNA'PPISH.✱ adj. [from knap.] Our old word for snappish; froward. Barret, and Sherwood.

To KNA'PPLE.† v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. Cotgrave defines it "to nibble or eat like a squirrel; to gnaw." V. GRIGNOTER.

KNA'PPY.✱ adj. [from knap.] Full of knaps or hillocks. Huloet.

KNA'PSACK.† n. s. [from knappen, German, to eat. But see SNAPSACK.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEED. n. s. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNAR.† n. s. [knor, German; but our word is more frequently written knur; though the adjective knarry, hitherto unnoticed, is very old. See KNUR. "A bunch or knor in a tree," is noticed in our lexicography. See Wythall's Dict. 1568.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knars deform'd and old,
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNA'RLED.✱ adj. [from knar.] Knotted. See GNARLED. It should be knarled.

KNA'RRY.✱ adj. [from knar.] Knotty; stubby. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

Knotty knarry barrein trees old
Of stubbes sharpe, and hidous to behold. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

This knarry club — the which no hand shall ever tosse. Transl. of Seneca, (1581,) fol. 213.

KNA'VE.† n. s. [cnapa, Sax. knab, German; knabe, knape, Iceland. All these have reference both to child and servant, which our word originally denoted. Mr. Tooke's opinion that the Saxon cnapa, knave, was probable napað, i. e. ne-hapað, genapað, qui nihil habet, (who has nothing,) the third person singular of nabban, i. e. ne-habban, is not likely to be received.]

1. A boy; a male or man-child.

Sche bare a knave-child. Wicliffe, Rev. xii. 5.

He had of children yonge two;
Frixus the first was of tho,
A knave-child, right faire withall;
A daughter eke, the whiche men call
Helle. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For lord and knave is all one wey,
When they be bore and when they dey. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5

For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath sir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by casting knaves get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNA'VERY. n. s. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
Like Æsop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope, Lett.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISHLY.† adv. [from knavish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously. Huloet, and Sherwood.

It is ordinary for hosts to be knavishly witty. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 8.

KNA'VISHNESS.* n. s. [from knavish.] State or quality of being knavish. Sherwood.

To KNAW.* Sometimes written for gnaw. See also To BEGNAW.

To KNEAD.† v. a. [cnæban, Saxon; kneden, Dutch. "Ab antiq. knet, massa. Wachter. Potius autem id deductum iverim ab Icel. knaea, vel naeda, factitare, movere." Serenius. The Sax. ᵹnıðan also is to knead, as well as cnæðan.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be;
Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison, Spect.

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.

The cake she kneaded was the savoury meat. Prior.

KNE'ADER.* n. s. [from knead.] A baker. Huloet, and Sherwood.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. s. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exod. viii. 3.

KNEE.† n. s. [kniw, Goth. cneop, Sax. knee, Dutch. Mr. Horne Tooke believes the Saxon hnıᵹan, and the Gothick kneiwan, to be same verb, meaning to bow, to bend; and the substantives to have been thence formed. A similar opinion appears to have long before been entertained by Serenius, who notices the Gothick verb in his illustration of our substantive; adding, however, the Icel. knie, knea, the knee, "vox antiquissima."]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee
Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton, P. L.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,
To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heaven, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed, but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go, you that banish'd him,
A mile before his tent, fall down and knee
The way into his mercy. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Return with her!
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took
Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg. Shakspeare.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out-kneed,

2. Having joints: as, kneed grass.

KNEEDE'EP.† adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

The ground in fourteen days is dry, and grass kneedeep within a month. Milton, Brief Hist. of Moscovia.

2. Sunk to the knees.

Gone already;
Inch thick, kneedeep! Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep through mire in clumsey shoes. Dryden.

KNEE-CRO'OKING* adj. [knee and crook.] Obsequious.

Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave. Shakspeare, Othello.

KNE'EDGRASS. n. s. [gramen geniculatum.] An herb.

KNE'EHOLM.† n. s. [aquifolium.] The name of a plant, called also kneeholly.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick. St. Matt. xvii. 14.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

KNE'ELER.* n. s. [from kneel.] One who shews obeisance by kneeling.

In this part of the church,—stood the class of the penitents, who were called kneelers, because at their going out, they fell down upon their knees before the bishop, who laid his hands upon them. Lewis, Consecration of Churches, p. 95.

KNE'EPAN. n. s. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its foreside. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pully. Quincy.

The kneepan, must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. Peacham on Drawing.

KNEETI'MBER.* n. s. See the second sense of KNEE.

We see how the shipwright doth make use of kneetimber, and other cross-grained pieces, as well as of streight and even, for framing a goodly vessel to ride on Neptune's back. Howell, Lett. iv. 4.

KNEETRI'BUTE. n. s. [knee and tribute.] Genuflection; worship or obeisance shown by kneeling.

Receive from us

KNELL.† n. s. [cnill, cnul, Welsh, the ringing of bells, a passing-bell; cnyll, Sax. from cnyllan, to strike a bell, to ring a bell. Some refer these words, as well as knoll, to the Latin nola, a little bell, which had its name from Nola, a town in Campania, in which they are pretended to have been invented, or to have been first used for pious purposes.] The sound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakspeare.

Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakspeare, Tempest.

When he was brought again to the bar to hear
His knell rung out, his judgement, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakspeare.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The amorous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shrowd. Prior.

KNEW. The preterite of know.

KNICK-KNACK.* A colloquial term, meaning any trifle or toy. See the first sense of KNACK.

KNIFE.† n. s. plur. knives. [cnıf, Saxon; knif, Su. kniv. Dan. canif, Fr. knyf, old Teut. both a knife and a sword, Kilian; knif, Icel. hneipa, to cut, Serenius. Some cite the Greek ξίφος, a sword. It is to the Celtick cneifio, to shear, however, that we may trace these words.]

1. An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Blest pow'rs, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden, Æn.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

2. A sword or dagger.

The time appointed nowe
Approched is, when knife
Of manly knight must yelde him fame,
And end the deadly strife.
Elviden, Hist. of Pisistr. and Catanea, bl. l. M. 6.

The red-cross knight was slain with paynim knife. Spenser, F. Q.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

KNIGHT.† n. s. [cnıht, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant or pupil. Dr. Johnson. — The Saxon word originally means a boy, cnıht, and cneoht; cnıhtcılð; and cnıhthað, childhood. Wachter and Ihre consider it as from the same stock with cnapa, or cnafa, a little boy. See KNAVE. Dr. Jamieson refers it to cneo, generation, which cneoht nearly resembles. The word next signified a servant, like knave; and often a military one: "I am a man ordeynid under power, and have knightis under me." Wicliffe, St. Matt. viii. Mr. H. Tooke considers it as the participle cnyt, (from cnyttan, to bind, un attaché.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser, F. Q.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser, F. Q.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
To give impiety to this reverent stile? Daniel, Civil Wars.

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female, and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakspeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant, Fr.] A wandering knight: one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Post.† A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping-post, or pillory.

I may not term them men, if there be such as I have heard to be, who will not let to sweare upon a booke, and that before any judge, beyng hyred thereunto for money. And such are called by the names of knightes of the poste, more fit for the gallowes than to live in a commonwealth where Christ is professed. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580,) fol. 39. b.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the Shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNI'GHTHOOD. n. s. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his noursling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. Spenser, F. Q.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour. Shakspeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? B. Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNI'GHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
That hast with knightless guile, and treacherous train,
Fair knighthood foully shamed. Spenser, F. Q.

KNI'GHTLINESS.* n. s. [from knightly.] Duties of a knight.

The prince did wonder much, yet could not ghesse
The cause of that his sorrowfull constraint;
Yet would by secret signes of manlinesse,
Which close appear'd in that rude brutishnesse,
That he whilome some gentle swaine had beene,
Train'd up in feats of armes and knightlinesse.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 45.

KNI'GHTLY. adj. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; beseeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws?
As in a listed field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNI'GHTLY.* adv. In a manner becoming a knight. Sherwood.

To KNIT. v. a. preter. knit or knitted. [cnittan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
Those curious nets thy slender fingers knit. Waller.

2. To tye.

Send for the county; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning. Shakspeare.

3. To join; to unite. This was formerly a word of extensive use; it is now less frequent.

His gall did grate for grief and high disdain,
And, knitting all his force, got one hand free. Spenser, F. Q.

These, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they are in my power. Shakspeare.

O let the vile world end,
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together! Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Lay your highness'
Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
For ever knit. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league. Shakspeare, K. John.

By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves. Shakspeare.

1. A complication of a cord or string not easily to be disentangled.

He found that reason's self now reasons found
To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound. Sidney.

As the fair vestal to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a vestal's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather in a knot her flowing hair. Addison.

2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Flowers worthy of paradise, which not nice art
In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,
Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale, and plain. Milton, P. L.

Their quarters are contrived into elegant knots, adorned with the most beautiful flowers. More.

Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half express'd, and half conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.

3. Any bond of association or union. [from knit.]

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

And by that knot looks proudly on the crown. Shakspeare.

I would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Why left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love? Shakspeare.

Not all that Saul could threaten or persuade,
In this close knot, the smallest looseness made. Cowley.

4. A hard part in a piece of wood caused by the protuberance of a bough, and consequently by a transverse direction of the fibres. A joint in an herb.

Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, being a crooked piece of wood, and full of knots, he hath carved it diligently, when he had nothing else to do. Wisd. xiii. 13.

Such knots and crossness of grain is objected here, as will hardly suffer that form, which they cry up here as the only just reformation, to go on so smoothly here as it might do in Scotland. King Charles.

5. Difficulty; intricacy.

A man shall be perplexed with knots and problems of business, and contrary affairs, where the determination is dubious, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; so that, which way soever the choice determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. South, Serm.

6. Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.

When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knot of the play untied, the rest is shut up in the compass of some few lines. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

7. A confederacy; an association; a small band. [from knit.]

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a conspiracy against me. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

What is there here in Rome that can delight thee?
Where not a soul, without thine own foul knot,
But fears and hates thee. B. Jonson, Catiline.

A knot of good fellows borrowed a sum of money of a gentleman upon the king's highway. L'Estrange.

I am now with a knot of his admirers, who make request that you would give notice of the window where the knight intends to appear. Addison, Spect.

8. A cluster; a collection. [from knit.]

The way of fortune is like the milky way in the sky, which is a meeting or knot of a number of small stars, not seen asunder, but giving light together. Bacon, Essays.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

9. A bird of the snipe kind; said to be so named from Canute, who was very fond of it.

The knot that called was Canutus' bird of old. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 25.

They compliment, they sit, they chat,
Fight o'er the wars; reform the state;
A thousand knotty points they clear,
Till supper and my wife appear. Prior.

To KNOW.† v. a. preter. I knew, I have known. [cnapan, Saxon; kunnan, Gothick; γινώσκω, γνόω, to know, Greek; and νοέω, to understand; from νόος, νῦς, the mind.]

1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come! Shakspeare.

The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men. Wisd. iv. 1.

The gods all things know. Milton.

Not from experience, for the world was new,
He only from their cause their natures knew. Denham.

We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition, and we know it. Dryden.

When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, he is obliged by the laws of ingenuity, and the end of speech, to make known what idea he makes it stand for. Locke.

2. To be informed of; to be taught.

Ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you. 1 Sam. vi. 3.

What nearer might concern him. Milton, P. L.

One would have thought you had known better things than to expect a kindness from a common enemy. L'Estrange.

3. To distinguish.

Numeration is but the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole a new name, whereby to know it from those before and after, and distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

4. To recognise.

What art thou, thus to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee. Shakspeare.

They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread. Luke, xxiv. 35.

At nearer view he thought he knew the dead,
And call'd the wretched man to mind. Flatman.

Tell me how I may know him. Milton.

5. To be no stranger to; to be familiar with.

What are you?
— A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

6. To converse with another sex.

And Adam knew Eve his wife. Gen. iv. 1.

To KNOW. v. n.

1. To have clear and certain perception; not to be doubtful.

I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod. Acts, xii. 11.

2. Not to be ignorant.

When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Bacon.

Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton, P. L.

In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy. Tillotson.

They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Poins will put on our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it. Shakspeare.

There is but one mineral body that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver. Boyle.

4. To KNOW for. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.

He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more diseases than he knew for. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

5. To KNOW of. In Shakspeare, is to take cognisance of; to examine.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For ay to be in shady cloister mew'd. Shakspeare.

KNO'WABLE. adj. [from know.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood.

These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more knowable in these than in less acknowledged mysteries. Glanville, Scepsis.

'Tis plain, that under the law of works is comprehended also the law of nature, knowable by reason, as well as the law given by Moses. Locke.

These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation. Bentley.

KNO'WER.† n. s. [from know.] One who has skill or knowledge. Huloet.

God, — the most certain and true knower of all things. Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, (1606,) p. 172.

If we look on a vegetable, and can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers. Glanville.

I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general knower of mankind and poetry. Southern.

KNO'WING. adj. [from know.]

1. Skilful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.

You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath our noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The knowingest of these have of late reformed their hypothesis. Boyle.

What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges. South.

The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world. South, Serm.

Bellino, one of the first who was of any consideration at Venice, painted very drily, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others. Addison, Guardian.

2. Conscious; intelligent.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions and assign such laws?
If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

KNO'WING. n. s. [from know.] Knowledge.

Let him be so entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakspeare.

KNO'WINGLY. adv. [from knowing.] With skill; with knowledge.

To KYD.† v. n. To know. See To KID.

L

L, ✝ A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated; as, hlaf, loaf; hlæfdig, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall; still; full, except after a dipthong; as, fail; feel; veal; cool. In a word of more syllables it is usually written single; as, channel; canal; tendril. It is sometimes put before e, and sounded feebly after it; as Bible; title.

Originally this letter, at the end of a monosyllable, was not doubled; al, ful, shal, &c. being the form of our old English.

It is sometimes mute; as, in alms, calf, chalk, and some other words.

La.✝ interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unless it be the French la. Dr. Johnson. — This is not the case; the expression is pure Saxon; la nu, lo now! "la hu oft, lo! how oft." Ps. lxxvii. 45.] See; look; behold.

> La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
> How he takes it at heart. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Lab.✱ n. s. A blab; a great talker; one that cannot keep a secret. One of our oldest words; and yet preserved in the Exmouth dialect. Chaucer uses also labbing for blabbing.

> I am no labbe,
> Ne though I say it, I n'am not lefe to gabbe.
> Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

La'bdanum. n. s. A resin, of a strong but not unpleasant smell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub in Crete. Hill.

To La'befy. v. a. [labefacio, Lat.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LA'BEL.✝ n. s. [labellum, Lat.]

1. The earliest sense seems to be that of a small slip of silk, or other materials; a kind of tassel; as, "a label hanging on each side of a mitre; labels hanging down on garlands or crowns; also jesses hanging at hawks' legs." Barret's Alveary, 1580. Thus Ainsworth translates "infula" a label hanging on each side of a mitre.

2. A small slip or scrip of writing.

LAB

> When wak'd, I found
> This label on my bosom; whose containing
> Is so from sense in hardness, that I can > Make no collection of it. Shakspeare, Cymb.

3. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

> On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

> God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
> And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd,
> Shall be the label to another deed,
> Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
> Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shakspeare.

To La'bel.✱ v. a. [from the noun.] To affix a label on any thing, in order to distinguish it.

La'bent. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Dict.

LA'BIAL. adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

> The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
>
> Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

La'biated. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

Labiode'ntal.✝ adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

> P and B are labial: Ph and Bh, or F and V, are labiodental. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Labo'rant. n. s. [laborans, Lat.] A chemist. Not in use.

> I can shew you a sort of fixt sulphur made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

La'boratory.✝ n. s. [laboratoire, Fr.] A chemist's work-room.

> They had forged this new doctrine in the laboratories at Rome. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 1. § 4.
>
> It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.
>
> The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the furnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Chr. Piety.

LABO'RIOUS. adj. [laborieux, French: laboriosus, Lat.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and, lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South.

A spacious cave within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

Do'st thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Addison.

LABO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Chr. Piety.

I chuse laboriously to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABO'RIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from laborious.]

1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness, as well as the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth, and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

Idleness is the emptiness, and business the fulness of the soul; and we all know that we may infuse what we will into an empty vessel, but a full one has no room for a farther infusion. In a word, idleness is that which sets all the capacities of the soul wide open, to let in the evil spirit, and to give both him, and all the villanies he can bring along with him, a free reception and a full possession; whereas, on the contrary, laboriousness shuts the doors and stops all the avenues of the mind, whereby a temptation would enter, and (which is yet more) leaves no void room for it to dwell there, if by any accident it should chance to creep in. South, Serm. vi. 372.

LA'BOUR. n. s. [labeur, French; labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakspeare.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thes. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

5. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
Incline thy will to affect our wishful vow. Spenser.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throes come thicker, and my cries encreas'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Graunt.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered. South, Serm.

To LA'BOUR.† v. n. [laboro, Lat.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to the top of that same hill?
—You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakspeare.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd,
More than mine own. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Who is with him?
—None but the fool, who labours to out-jest;
His heart-struck injuries. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exod. v. 9.

He is so touched with the memory of her benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression to represent it. Notes on Pope's Odyssey.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect. Col. iv. 12.

2. To do work; to take pains.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich. Ecclus. xix. 1.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Neh. iv. 22.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

4. To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Lat.] Not in use.

They abound with horse,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour. B. Jonson.

I was called to another, who in childbed laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. Wiseman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this infernal lake the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and frees the labouring skies. Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the labouring moon. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

This exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wake, Prep. for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in the throes of birth;
For the unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and toss'd it on the flame. Dryden, Ovid.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God. Pope.

7. In naval language, spoken of a ship, when every timber is put to the test, and the whole constitution of her architecture is in the full play of all its powers.

To LA'BOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgement. 2 Mac.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
The artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden, Æn.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

2. To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryden.

LA'BOURER. n. s. [laboureur, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the labourer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,

To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryden.

Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbuthnot.

Not balmy sleep to labourers faint with pain,
Not showers to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy sight to me. Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The labourer bears. Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakspeare.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourers toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

LA'BOURLESS.* adj. [labour and less.] Not laborious.

They intend not your precise abstinence from any light and labourless work. Brerewood on the Sab. (1630,) p. 48.

LA'BOUROUS.* adj. [from labour.] Our old word for laborious.

For husband's life is laborous and hard. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

LA'BOUROUSLY.* adv. [from labourous.] Laboriously.

He labourously and studiously discussed controversies. Sir. T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 168.

LA'BOURSOME.† adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not now in use.

A skilful and laboursome husbandmen. Abp. Sandys, Serm. fol. 23. b.

Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Jove angry. Shakspeare, Cymb.

He hath, my lord, by laboursome petition,
Wrung from me my slow leave. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This may suffice after all their laboursome scrutiny of the councils. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

LA'BRA. n. s. [Spanish.] A lip. Not used. Hanmer.

Word of denial in thy labras here;
Word of denial, froth and scum thou liest. Shakspeare.

LA'BYRINTH.† n. s. [labyrinthus, Latin.]

1. A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.

Suffolk, stay;
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shakspeare.

Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear. Donne.

My clamours tear
The ears soft labyrinth, and cleft the air. Sandys.

The earl of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself. Clarendon.

My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I' the maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world. Denham.

2. Formerly a distinguished ornament in the gardens of our ancestors.

Delightful bowers, to solace lovers true;
False labyrinths, fond runners' eyes to daze. Spenser, F. Q.

LABYRI'NTHIAN.* adj. [from labyrinth.] Having inextricable turnings or windings; perplexed like a labyrinth.

His linen collar labyrinthian set,
Whose thousand double turnings never met. Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

A contracted, subtile, and intricate face, full of quirks and turnings; a labyrinthæan face. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Mark, how the labyrinthian turns they take,
The circles intricate. Young, Night Th. 9.

LABU'RNUM.* n. s. A shrub [of the cytisus kind] that grows to the size of a tree.

The pale laburnum grac'd with yellow plumes. Anon.

LAC. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom. Hill.

LACE.† n. s. [lacet, French; laqueus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. læccan, læcȝan, læccean, prehendere, apprehendere, to take hold of. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain:
For striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his winges twain
In limy snares, the subtil loops among. Spenser, Muiopotmos.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had snared been in love's strong lace. Fairfax.

3. A platted string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O, cut my lace, lest my heart cracking, it
Break too. Shakspeare.

Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face. Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem. Bacon.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,
But trimm'd with curious lace. Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word: now out of use. Dr. Johnson. — Rather the addition of spirits.

He is forced every morning to drink his dish of coffee by itself, without the addition of the Spectator, that used to be better than lace to it. Addison, Spect. No. 488.

If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace. Prior.

To LACE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tie; to bind as with a cord.

Never man wist of pain,
But he were lacid in love's chain. Chaucer, Rom. R. 3178.

2. To fasten with a string run through eyelet holes.

I caused a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened. Wiseman.

At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away. Dryden.

These glitt'ring spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits; but suits in vain:
Messapus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest. Dryden.

Like Mrs. Primly's great belly; she may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips. Congreve.

When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist. Prior.

3. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver. Shakspeare.

4. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountains' tops. Shakspeare.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front. Pope.

5. To beat; whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lash. Dr. Johnson. — It is no doubt from the sense of lace as a cord, a rope's end; and no corruption of lash. L'Estrange's phrase is still in use among the common people.

I do not love to be laced in, when I go to lace a rascal. Two Angry Women of Abingdon, (1599.)

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye. L'Estrange.

LACED Coffee.✻ See the last sense of the substantive lace. Coffee having spirits in it. I believe "laced tea" is yet an expression in the north of England.

Mr. Nisby is of opinion, that laced coffee is bad for the head. Addison, Spect. No. 317.

LACED Mutton. An old word for a whore.

Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour. Shakspeare.

LA'CEMAN. n. s. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a nonjurer, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Cæsar or Nero. Addison, Spect.

LA'CEWOMAN.✻ n. s. [lace and woman.] She who makes or sells lace.

Mrs. Basset, the great lacewoman of Cheapside, went foremost, and led the queen by the hand. Strafforde Letters, (under the Year 1635,) i. 506.

LA'CERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composure. Harvey.

To LA'CERATE.† v. a. [lacero, Latin; probably from the Greek ληκέω, to crack, whence λακὶς, a rent, and λακίζω, to tear asunder; loc, Celt. to cut, pain, or wound.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my sons lacerate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth. Howell, Engl Tears.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling. Derham, Physico. Theol.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear. Vanity of Human Wishes.

LACERA'TION. n. s. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacerations upon small causes. Arbuthnot.

LA'CERATIVE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

LA'CHRYMABLE.✻ adj. [lachrymabilis, Latin.] Lamentable. Cockeram.

This lacrymable vale of misery, in whiche we be born. Ld. Morley, Tr. of Boccace, temp. Hen. VIII.

LA'CHRYMAL. adj. [lachrymal, French.] Generating tears.

It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it. Cheyne, Philos. Principles.

LA'CHRYMARY. adj. [lachryma, Latin.] Containing tears.

How many dresses are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels? Addison.

LACHRYMA'TION.† n. s. [from lachryma.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears. Cockeram.

LA'CHRYMATORY.† n. s. [lachrimatoire, French.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

Your unparalleled museum is furnished with a great variety of lamps, lacrimatories, &c. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705,) p. 308.

The learned Mr. Wise, late Radclivian librarian, had a glass lachrymatory, or rather a sepulchral aromatic phial, dug up between Noke and Wood-Eaton. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 57.

LACI'NIATED. adj. [from lacinia, Lat.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LACK.† v. a. [lacka, to be wanting, Gothick; laecken, to lessen, Dutch.]

1. To want; to need; to be without.

Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force of prayer, who regardeth the very moanings, groans, and sighs of the heart. Hooker.

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack any thing in it. Deut. viii. 9.

One day we hope thou shalt bring back,
Dear Bolingbroke, the justice that we lack. Daniel.
Intreat they may; authority they lack. Daniel.

2. To blame; to find fault with. [Su. Goth. lacka, to blame.] Obsolete.

Ye have discriven so,
And lacke and praise it bothe two. Chaucer, Rom. R. 4804.

To LACK. v. n.

1. To be in want.

The lions do lack and suffer hunger. Ps. Comm. Prayer.

2. To be wanting.

Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? Genesis, viii. 28.

There was nothing lacking to them: David recovered all. 1 Sam. xxx. 19.

That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied. 1 Cor. xvi. 17.

LACK.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Want; need; failure. Rarely found in the plural number.

Medicine to reform any small lacks in a prince, or to cure any little griefs in a government. Homilies, Serm. Part. 1. Against Rebellion.

In the Scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life. Hooker.

Many that are not mad
Have sure more lack of reason. Shakspeare.

He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

The trenchant blade, toledo trusty,
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And eat into itself, for lack
Of somebody to hew and hack. Hudibras.

2. A term in India applied to money; as a lack of, or one hundred thousand, rupees. Written also leck.

A hundred thousand roopees make one leck, a hundred leck make one crou. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.

LACKADA'Y.✻ interj. A frequent colloquial term, implying alas; most probably from the forgotten verb lack, to blame. See the second sense of the active verb LACK. The expression therefore may be considered, as blaming, finding fault with, the day, on which the event mentioned happened.

LA'CKBRAIN. n. s. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.

What a lackbrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

LA'CKER.✻ n. s. [from lack.] One who is wanting.

The lack of one may cause the wrack of all;
Although the lackers were terrestrial gods,
Yet will they ruling reel, or reeling fall.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, K. 2.

LA'CKER. n. s. A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LA'CKER. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear over with lacker.

What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope.

LA'CKEY.† n. s. [lacquais, Fr. Dr. Johnson.— Sueth. olim lacka, currere, to run; M.Goth. laikan; Su. Goth. leka, ludere, to scoff, to make game of. Serenius.] An attending servant; a foot-boy.

They would shame to make me
Wait else at door: a fellow counsellor,
'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys! Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He's cautious to avoid the coach and six,
And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden, Juv.

Lacqueys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison, Spect.

To LA'CKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lackeying the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

So dear to heaven is saintly chastity,
That when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton, Comus.

To LA'CKEY.† v. n. To act as a foot-boy; to pay servile attendance.

To be made an ordinary process, to lackey up and down for fees. Bacon. On the Edif. of the Ch. of Eng.

Oft have I servants seen on horses ride,
The free and noble lackey by their side. Sandys.

Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet: he lackeys by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden.

LA'CKLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.

You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

LACKLU'STRE. adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lacklustre eye,
Says very wisely, It is ten a clock. Shakspeare.

LACO'NICAL.* adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr. This word is old in our language; but it is not noticed by Dr. Johnson. Laconick he has given with an example only from Pope; but that word was also in use long before Pope wrote. The expression, as Dr. Johnson has observed under laconick, is from Lacones, the Spartans, who used few words. They are said to have answered the letter of Philip, in which he threatened that if he came near their city he would destroy it, with merely the word if.] Short; concise; brief; pithy.

The learned Plutarch in his laconical apophthegms tells of a sophister, that made a long and tedious oration in praise of Hercules. Harrington, Apolog. of Poetrie.

His head had now felt the razor, his back the rod: all that laconical discipline pleased him well; which another, being condemned to, would justly account a torment. Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. E. 5.

LACO'NICALLY.† adv. [from laconical.] Briefly; concisely.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and desirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot laconically. Camden, Rem.

Patient meekness takes injuries like pills, not chewing but swallowing them down, laconically suffering and silently passing them over. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

LACO'NICK.† adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr.] Short; brief.

They [metaphors] commonly thrive better in the ground of a large and open style than in a laconick and strict one. Instruct. for Oratory, (Oxford, 1682,) p. 56.

His sense was strong, and his style laconick. Welwood's Mem. p. 83.

I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

LA'CONISM.† n. s. [laconisme, Fr. laconismus, Lat.] A concise stile: called by Pope laconicism, in his Letter to Swift, cited under laconick.

The hand of Providence writes often by abbreviatures, hieroglyphicks, or short characters, which, like the laconism on the wall [Daniel, iii. 25.] are not to be made out but by a hint or key from that Spirit which indited them. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 25.

As the language of the face is universal, so it is very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it. It is the short-hand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier of the Aspect.

LA'CTAGE.* n. s. [lac, lactis, Lat.] Produce from animals yielding milk.

It is thought that the offering of Abel, who sacrificed of his flocks, was only wool, the fruits of his shearing; and milk, or rather cream, a part of his lactage. Shuckford on the Creation, i. 79.

LA'CTARY. adj. [lactarius, Lat.] Milky; full of juice like milk.

From lactary, or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice dispersed through every part, there arise flowers blue and yellow. Brown, Vulg. Err.

LA'CTARY. n. s. [lactarium, Lat.] A dairy house.

LACTA'TION. n. s. [lacto, Lat.] The act or time of giving suck.

LA'CTEAL. adj. [from lac, Lat.] Milky; conveying chyle of the colour of milk.

As the food passes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is separated from the excrementitious by the lacteal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood. Locke.

LA'CTEAL. n. s. The vessel that conveys chyle.

The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment, acrimonious or not sufficiently attenuated, to enter in people of lax constitutions, whereas their sphincters will shut against them in such as have strong fibres. Arbuthnot.

LACTE'AN.* adj. [lacteus, Lat.] Milky; having the colour of milk.

This lactean whiteness ariseth from a great number of little stars constipated in that part of heaven, flying so swiftly from the sight of our eyes, that we can perceive nothing but a confused light. Moxon, Astronom. Cards, p. 13.

LACTE'OUS. adj. [lacteus, Lat.]

1. Milky.

Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Lacteal; conveying chyle.

The lungs are suitable for respiration, and the lacteous vessels for the reception of the chyle. Bentley.

LACTE'SCENCE. n. s. [lactesco, Lat.] Tendency to milk, or milky colour.

This lactescence does commonly ensue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the solution. Boyle on Colours.

LACTE'SCENT. adj. [lactescens, Lat.] Producing milk, or a white juice.

Amongst the pot-herbs are some lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholesome juice. Arbuthnot.

LACTI'FEROUS. adj. [lac and fero.] What conveys or brings milk.

He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct. Ray on the Creation.

LAD. n. s. [leoδe, Saxon, which commonly signifies people, but sometimes, says Mr. Lye, a boy.]

1. A boy; a stripling, in familiar language.

We were
Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The poor lad who wants knowledge, must set his invention on the rack, to say something where he knows nothing. Locke.

Too far from the ancient forms of teaching several good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of such lads as have been removed to other schools. Watts.

2. A boy; a young man, in pastoral language.

For grief whereof the lad would after joy,
But pin'd away in anguish, and self-will'd annoy. Spenser.

The shepherd lad,
Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat
So many ages. Milton, P. R.

LAD.* The ancient preterite of lead; now led.

No joy
In all his life, which afterwards he lad,
He ever tasted. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 2.

She departed and went up into a hyghe battilment, and ladde with her xii gentylwomen. Hist. of K. Arthur, B. xvi. ch. 12.

LA'DDER.† n. s. [hlæδne, Sax. llethring, Cym. scala, q. d. ledare, à Su. Goth. leda, ducere, to lead: à Celt. llethr, clivus, Icel. hlidr, latus, unde et Germ. hlettern, klettern, scandere, to mount. Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.

Whose compost is rotten, and carried in time,
And spread as it should be, thrift's ladder may climb. Tusser.

Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play,
And some more bold mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

Easy in words thy style, in sense sublime;
'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,
Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Prior.

I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants with two or three ladders to mount it. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. Any thing by which one climbs.

Then took she help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a hasty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief. Sidney.

I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords. Shakspeare.

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which
My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shakspeare.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakspeare.

3. A gradual rise.

Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift.

LADE. n. s.

Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon laδe, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river. Gibson's Camden.

To LADE. v. a. preter. laded; and part. passive, laded or laden. [from hlaδan, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.]

1. To load; to freight; to burthen.

And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence. Genesis, xlii. 26.

The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burthen they will bear. Bacon.

The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea
With prosp'rous winds; a woman leads the way. Dryden.

Though the peripatetick doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke.

2. [hlaδan, to draw, Saxon.] To heave out; to throw out.

He chides the sea that sunders him from them,
Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way. Shakspeare.

They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too fast there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allay all heats of the blood by abstinence, and cooling herbs. Temple.

If there be springs in the slate marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out. Mortimer.

To LADE.* v. n. [hlaδan, Sax.] To draw water.

She did not think best to lade at the shallow channel, but runs rather to the well-head, where she may dip and fill the firkins at once with ease. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 2.

To LA'DIFY.* v. a. [lady, and fio, Lat.] To make a lady of.

Your fortune,
Or rather your husband's industry, advanc'd you
To the rank of merchant's wife: He made a knight,
And your sweet mistress-ship ladify'd, you wore
Satin on solemn days, a chain of gold,
A velvet hood. Massinger, City Madam.

LA'DING. n. s. [from lade.] Weight; burthen.

Some we made prize, while others burnt and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went. Waller.

The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens the utter loss of the ship: there is but one way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South.

It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves. L'Estrange.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

LA'DKIN.* n. s. [from lad.] A youth.

Tharrhon, that young ladkin hight,
He pray'd this aged sire for to reveal
What way —— we may escape. More, Life of the Soul, iii. 31.

LA'DLE. n. s. [hlæδle, Saxon, from hlaδan; leaugh, Erse.]

1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid from the vessel containing it.

Some stirr'd the molten ore with ladles great. Spenser.

When the materials of glass have been kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen take off with ladles. Boyle.

A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

2. The receptacles of a mill wheel, into which the water falling turns it.

LA'DLE-FUL. n. s. [ladle and full.]

If a footman be going up with a dish of soup, let the cook with a ladle-ful dribble his livery all the way up stairs. Swift.

LA'DY.† n. s. [hlæfδiᵹ, hlafδiᵹ, hlafδia, Saxon; supposed by Verstegan and others to be from hlaf, Sax. hlaif, Goth. bread, and dian, to serve or distribute; because the mistress of the family used to distribute the bread to the domesticks and guests; the laford or lord allowing the food, the leafdian or lady seeing that it was duly served. To this Mr. H. Tooke opposes hlaf as the past participle of hlifian, to raise; and thence pronounces hlafoрδ, or lord, a word compounded of hlaf, raised, and ord, origin or birth, meaning therefore "high-born, of an exalted origin"; and hlafdig, lady, as merely lofty, that is, raised or exalted; her birth being out of the question, as the wife follows the condition of the husband. Serenius, however, notices the Gothick lafda or lafd, a mistress, "hera, domina;" and Dr. Jamieson, from an old Icelandick work, the following words of the serpent to Eve: "Thu ert lafde myn, en Adam er lavardr min: Thou art my lady, and Adam is my lord." See also LORD.]

1. A woman of high rank: the title of lady properly belongs to the wives of knights, of all degrees above them, and to the daughters of earls, and all of higher ranks.

I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, play'd false with a smith. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady.—— I your lady, Sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I am sorry my relation to so deserving a lady, should be any occasion of her danger and affliction. King Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.

O foolish fairy's son, what fury mad
Hath thee incens'd to haste thy doleful fate?
Were it not better I that lady had,
Than that thou hadst repented it too late? Spenser.

Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of. Ralegh.

May every lady an Evadne prove,
That shall divert me from Aspasia's love. Waller.

Shou'd I shun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans wou'd reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains. Dryden.

We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face. Addison on Anc. Medals.

3. A word of complaisance used of women.

Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immoment toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I hope I may speak of women without offence to the ladies. Guardian.

4. Mistress, importing power and dominion; as, lady of the manor.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champaigns rich'd,
With plenteous rivers, and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. LADY in the Straw. An expression used to signify the woman who is brought to bed; derived from the circumstance that all beds were anciently stuffed with straw; so that it is synonymous with saying "the lady in bed," or that is confined to her bed. Brand, Popular Antiq. Hence perhaps the name of the herb "lady-bedstraw."

LADY-BE'DSTRAW.† n. s. [Gallium.] A plant of the stellate kind. Miller.

Botanists — show a very particular regard to the fair sex — as we may well conclude from so many names they give to plants; ladys fingers, ladys laces, ladys linen, maiden herb, ladys bedstraw, ladys slipper, &c. Stukely, Palæogr. Sacra, p. 25.

LA'DY-BIRD.†
LA'DY-BUG.
LA'DY-COW.
LA'DY-FLY.
} n. s. A small red insect vaginopennous.

Fly lady-bird, north, south, or east or west,
Fly where the man is found that I love best. Gay.

This lady-fly I take from off the grass,
Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass. Gay.

It is extremely unlucky to kill a cricket, a lady-bug, a swallow, &c. Grose, Popular Superstitions.

LADY-DA'Y. n. s. [lady and day.] The day on which the annunciation of the blessed virgin is celebrated.

LA'DY-LIKE.† adj. [lady and like.]

1. Soft; delicate; elegant.

With fingers lady-like. Warner, Albion's Engl. ch. 9.

Her tender constitution did declare,
Too lady-like a long fatigue to bear. Dryden.

2. Affected; effeminate.

Some of these so rigid, yet very spruce and lady-like preachers, think fit to gratify as their own persons, so their kind hearers and spectators. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 179.

LA'DY-MANTLE. n. s. [Alchimilla.] A plant. Miller.

LA'DYSHIP.† n. s. [from lady.]

1. Originally, the state of a lady.

I will do thee suche ladiship,
Whereof thou shalt for evermo
Be riche. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

2. The title of a lady.

Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring. Shakspeare.

If they be nothing but mere statesmen,
Your lady-ship shall observe their gravity,
And their reservedness, their many cautions,
Fitting their persons. B. Jonson, Catiline.

I the wronged pen to please,
Make it my humble thanks express
Unto your ladyship in these. Waller.

'Tis Galla; let her ladyship but peep. Dryden, Juv.

LA'DY'S-SLIPPER. n. s. [Calceolus.] A plant. Miller.

LA'DY'S-SMOCK. n. s. [Cardamine.] A plant. Miller.

When dazies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,
Do paint the meadows with delight. Shakspeare.

See here a boy gathering lilies and lady-smocks, and there a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, all to make garlands. Walton, Angler.

LAG.† adj. [læng, Saxon, long; lagg, Swedish, the end.]

1. Coming behind; falling short.

I could be well content
To entertain the lag end of my life
With quiet hours. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

The slowest footed who come lag, supply the show of a rearward. Carew, Survey.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Sluggish; slow; tardy. It is out of use, but retained in Scotland, Dr. Johnson says. It was thus well employed, in his own time, (he might have added to the examples from Shakspeare and Dryden,) by the author of The Grave. And it is still retained in our colloquial language.

He, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy cripple had the countermand,
That came too lag to see him buried. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

We know your thoughts of us, that laymen are
Lag souls, and rubbish of remaining clay,
Which Heaven, grown weary of more perfect work,
Set upright with a little puff of breath,
And bid us pass for men. Dryden, Don Sebast.

Even the lag flesh
Rests too in hope of meeting once again
Its better half, never to sunder more:
Nor shall it hope in vain. R. Blair, The Grave.

3. Last; long delayed.

Pack to their old play-fellows; there I take
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at. Shakspeare.

LAG. n. s.

1. The lowest class; the rump; the fag end.

The rest of your foes, O gods, the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people, what is amiss in them, make suitable for destruction. Shakspeare.

2. He that comes last, or hangs behind.

The last, the lag of all the race. Dryden, Virg.
What makes my ram the lag of all the flock. Pope.

To LAG. v. n.

1. To loiter; to move slowly.

She pass'd, with fear and fury wild;
The nurse went lagging after with the child. Dryden.
The remnant of his days he safely past,
Nor found they lagg'd too slow, nor flow'd too fast. Prior.

2. To stay behind; not to come in.

Behind her far away a dwarf did lag. Spenser, F. Q.
I shall not lag behind, nor err
The way, thou leading. Milton, P. L.
The knight himself did after ride,
Leading Crowdero by his side,
And tow'd him, if he lagg'd behind,
Like boat against the tide and wind. Hudibras.
If he finds a fairy lag in light,
He drives the wretch before, and lashes into night. Dryden.
She hourly press'd for something new;
Ideas came into her mind
So fast, his lessons lagg'd behind. Swift.

LA'GGARD.* adj. [from lag.] Backward; sluggish; slow.

Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
Had more of strength, diviner rage,
Than all which charms this laggard age. Collins, Ode. xii.

LA'GGER. n. s. [from lag.] A loiterer; an idler; one that loiters behind.

LA'ICAL.† adj. [laique, Fr. laicus, Lat. λαϊκὸς, Græco-barb. from λάος, the people.] Belonging to the laity, or people as distinct from the clergy.

In all ages the clerical will flatter as well as the laical. Camden.

It is amazing to see the strange absurdities committed by the clergy of the middle ages, in adopting the laical character. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 345.

LA'ICK.* n. s. [laique, Fr.] A layman; one of the people distinct from the clergy.

The words — teach a command for the use of both kinds, as well to laicks as priest. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633,) p. 184.

LA'ICK.* adj. Belonging to the laity; denoting the people as distinct from the clergy.

It reflects to the disrepute of our ministers also, that — they should be still frequented with such an unprincipled, unedified, and laick rabble. Milton, Areopagitica.

LAID. Preterite participle of lay.

Money laid up for the relief of widows and fatherless children. 2 Mac. iii. 10.

A scheme which was writ some years since, and laid by to be ready on a fit occasion. Swift.

LA'IDLY.* adj. [laðlic, Sax.] Ugly; loathsome; foul. North of England.

LAIN.† Preterite participle of lie; and formerly written lien.

Mary seeth two angels in white, sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. St. John, xx. 12.

The parcels had lain by, before they were opened, between four and five years. Boyle.

LAIR.† n. s. [lai, in French, signifies a wild sow, or a forest: the derivation is easy in either sense; or from leger, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — The Teut. laegher is the bed of wild beasts; and is to be referred to the Goth. laeger and ligr, a bed, from ligga, to lie down.]

1. The couch of a boar, or wild beast.

Out of the ground uprose,
As from his lair, the wild beast, where he wons
In forest wild, in thicket brake, or den. Milton, P. L.
But range the forest, by the silver side
Of some cool stream, where nature shall provide
Green grass and fatt'ning clover for your fare,
And mossy caverns for your noon-tide lair. Dryden, Virg.

2. [From lea, Sax. pascuum, campus.] Pasture; the ground.

More hard for hungry steed t' abstaine from pleasant lare. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 29.
This gyant's sonne that lies there on the laire
An headlesse heap. Ibid. 31.
Have the winters been so set
To raine and snow, [that] they have wet
All his driest laire? W. Browne.

LAIRD. n. s. [hlaforð, Saxon.] The lord of a manor in the Scottish dialect.

Shrive but their title, and their moneys poize,
A laird and twenty pence pronounc'd with noise,
When constru'd but for a plain yeoman go,
And a good sober two pence, and well so. Cleaveland.

LA'ITY. n. s. [λαός.]

1. The people, as distinguished from the clergy.

An humble clergy is a very good one, and an humble laity too, since humility is a virtue that equally adorns every station of life. Swift.

2. The state of a layman.

The more usual cause of this deprivation is a mere laity, or want of holy orders. Ayliffe, Parergon.

LAKE.† n. s. [lac, laca, Saxon; lac, Fr. lacus, Lat.]

1. A large diffusion of inland water.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.

2. Small plash of water.

3. A middle colour, betwixt ultramarine and vermilion, yet it is rather sweet than harsh. It is made of cochineal. [lacque, French; ruby or rose colour.] Dryden.

To LAKE.* v. n. [laikan, Gothick and Saxon.] To play. Used in the north of England. Ray, and Grose.

LA'KY.* adj. [from lake.] Belonging to a lake. Sherwood.

LAMB. n. s. [lamb, Gothick and Saxon.]

1. The young of a sheep.

I'm young; but something
You may deserve of him through me, and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
To appease an angry god. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
The lamb, thy riot dooms to bleed to day,
Had he thy knowledge would he skip and play? Pope.

2. Typically, the Saviour of the world.

O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Common Prayer.

To LAMB.* v. n. [from the noun.] To yean; to bring forth lambs. Sherwood.

LAMB-ALE.* n. s. A feast at the time of shearing lambs.

St. John.
Jeremiah lamented for Josiah, and all the singing-men and women spake of Josiah in their lamentations. 2 Chron.
Far less I now lament for one whole world
Of wicked sons destroy'd, than I rejoice
For one man found so perfect and so just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton, P. L.

To Lame'nt. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to express sorrow for.
As you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shakspeare.
The pair of sages praise;
One pitied, one contemn'd the woful times,
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.

Lame'nt. n. s. [lamentum, Lat. from the verb.]
1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.
We, long ere our approaching, heard within
Noise, other than the sound of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milton, P. L.
The loud laments arise
Of one distress'd, and mastiffs' mingled cries. Dryden.
2. Expression of sorrow.
To add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakspeare.

La'mentable. adj. [lamentabilis, Lat. lamentable, Fr. from lament.]
1. To be lamented; causing sorrow.
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Shakspeare.
2. Mournful; sorrowful; expressing sorrow.
A lamentable tune is the sweetest musick to a woful mind.
Sidney.
The victors to their vessels bear the prize,
And hear behind loud groans, and lamentable cries. Dryden.

3. Miserable, in a ludicrous or low sense; pitiful; despicable.

This bishop, to make out the disparity between the heathens and them, flies to this lamentable refuge. Stillingfleet.

LA'MENTABLY. adv. [from lamentable.]

1. With expressions or tokens of sorrow; mournfully.

The matter in itself lamentable, lamentably expressed by the old prince, greatly moved the two princes to compassion. Sidney.

2. So as to cause sorrow.

Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Pitifully; despicably.

LAMENTA'TION. n. s. [lamentatio, Lat.] Expression of sorrow; audible grief.

Be't lawful that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

His sons buried him, and all Israel made great lamentation for him. 1 Mac. ii. 10.

LAME'NTER.✝ n. s. [from lament.] One who mourns or laments.

There were a sort of men called lamenters, who had a publick office, as our bearers have, to attend upon funerals, and make doleful lamentations. Bp. Patrick on Gen. l. 11.

Such a complaint good company must pity, whether they think the lamenter ill or not. Spectator.

LAME'NTING.* n. s. [from lament.] Lamentation; sorrow audibly expressed.

Chimneys were blown down; and, as they say,
Lamentings heard i'the air, strange screams of death.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Cease your lamentings, Trojans, for a while. Congreve, Iliad.

LA'MENTINE. n. s. A fish called a sea-cow or manatee, which is near twenty feet long, the head resembling that of a cow, and two short feet, with which it creeps on the shallows and rocks to get food; but has no fins: the flesh is commonly eaten. Bailey.

*LA'MIA. n. s. [Latin.] A kind of demon among the ancients, who, under the form of a beautiful woman, was said to have devoured children; a hag; a witch.

Where's the lamia
That tears my entrails? I'm bewitch'd; seize on her.
Massinger, Virg. Martyr.

LA'MINA.✝ n. s. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.

The head [of the snake] is covered with twelve principal laminæ, besides a number of smaller, irregular in shape.— The central lamina between the eyes is the largest.
Russell on Indian Serpents.

LA'MINATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated: used of such bodies whose contexture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.

From the apposition of different coloured gravel arises, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sharp.

To LAMM.✝ v. a. [lahmen, Teut. lamen, Belg. to strike, to beat. Skinner.] To beat soundly with a cudgel.

Lamm'd you shall be ere we leave ye:—
You shall be beaten sober. Beaum. and Fl. Beggars' Bush.

LA'MMAS.✝ n. s. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of mass, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may else be corrupted from lattermath. Dr. Johnson. — The following is the account which the learned Hammond gives of the word. "Lammas, in the Saxon hlaꝼmæꞅ, lafmess, i. e. loaf-mass, or bread-mass, is so named as a feast of thanksgiving to God for the first-fruits of the corn, and seems to have been observed with bread of new wheat; and accordingly 'tis an usage, in some places, for tenants to be bound to bring in wheat of that year to their lord, on or before the first of August." Works, vol. i. p. 660. Somner and Blount record the same derivation. In later times it has been well observed, that lammas day, in the Salisbury Manuals, is called benedictio novorum fructuum; in the Red Book of Derby, hlaꝼ-mæꞅꞅe ꝺæᵹ; but in the Sax. Chron. hlam-mæꞅꞅe; that mass was a word for festival, whence our Christmas, Candlemas, &c.; and that therefore instead of lammas quasi lamb-mass, from the offering of the tenants at York, we may rather suppose the ꝼ to have been left out in course of time of general use, and thus la-mas, or hla-mæꞅꞅe, appears. See Gent. Mag. Jan. 1799. p. 33. See also the etym. of LAMBS-WOOL.] The first of August.

In 1578 was that famous lammas day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria. Bacon.

Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come lammas eve at night, shall she be fourteen.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

LAMP. n. s. [lampe, Fr. lampas, Lat.]

1. A light made with oil and a wick.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.

In lamp furnaces I used spirit of wine instead of oil, and the same flame has melted foliated gold. Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quickening spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.

Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bower,
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

LA'MPASS. n. s. [lampas, Fr.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth. Farrier's Dict.

His horse possest with the glanders, troubled with the lampass, infected with the fashions.
Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

LA'MPBLACK.✝ n. s. [lamp and black.] It is made by holding a torch under the bottom of a bason, and as it is furred striking it with a feather into some shell, and grinding it with gum water.
Peacham on Drawing.

Being overtaken with liquor one Saturday evening, I shaved the priest with Spanish blacking for shoes instead of a wash-ball, and with lampblack powdered his periwig.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mem. of P. P.

LA'MPING.✝ adj. [lampante, Italian.] Shining; sparkling. Not used.

Happy lines on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deign sometimes to look.
Spenser, Sonnet.

LAMPO'ON. n. s. [Bailey derives it from lampons, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lamper, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals. Trevoux.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.

They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age: they have sown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other in lampoons. Dryden.

Make satire a lampoon. Pope.

To LAMPO'ON. v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with personal satire.

LAMPO'ONER. n. s. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.

We are naturally displeased with an unknown critick, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark. Dryden.

The squibs are those who are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler.

LA'MPREY.† n. s. [lamproye, Fr. lampreye, Dutch; lampprecba, Saxon.]

Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lamperne. Walton.

LA'MPRON. n. s. A kind of sea fish.

These rocks are frequented by lamprons, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Broome on the Odyssey.

LANCE.† n. s. [lance, Fr. lancea, Lat. λογχη, Greek; lanca, Arm. to brandish a spear, to dart.]

1. A long spear, which, in the heroick ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback. Spear; javelin.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lancely blow. Sidney.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it. Shakspeare.

They shall hold the bow and the lance. Jer. l. 42.

Hector beholds his jav'lin fall in vain,
Nor other lance, nor other hope remain;
He calls Deiphobus, demands a spear
In vain, for no Deiphobus was there. Pope.

2. Balance. [lance, Italian; "in dubbia lance," Tasso, G. Lib. xx. 50. From the Lat. lanx.] Obsolete.

Need teacheth her this lesson hard and rare,
That fortune all in equall launce doth sway.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 4.

To LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pierce; to cut.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakspeare.

In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives. Glanville, Scepsis.

The infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart,
Drew backward. Dryden.

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.

We do lance
Diseases in our bodies. Shakspeare.

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore. Shakspeare.

That differs as far from our usual severities, as the lancings of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Lance the sore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden.

The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle pray'rs, from heav'n demands. Dryden.

LA'NCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lancely blow. Sidney.

LANCEPESA'DE.† n. s. [lance spezzate, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Formerly lancepesado, and by corruption lancepresado. It is originally Italian: lancia spezzata.] The officer under the corporal; not now in use among us, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Cleaveland. Perhaps lance-corporal is now the term for such officer. Properly the lancepesade signifies a reduced officer.

Since feathers were cashier'd,
The ribbands have been to some office rear'd;
'Tis hard to meet a lanspresado, where
Some ells of favour do not straight appear.
J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 10.

The lowest range and meanest officer in an army is called lancepesado or prezado; who is the leader or governor of half a file; and therefore is commonly called a middle man, or captain over four. The Soldier's Accidence, p. 1.

To th' Indies of her arm he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepesade
With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore. Cleaveland.

LA'NCER.* n. s. [from lance; French, lancier.]

1. One that carries a lance; one armed with a lance.

Each launceer well his weightie launce did wield. Mir. for Mag. p. 822.

They passed with all speed through the vauntguard of some seven hundred lanciers.
Sir R. Williams, Act. of the L. Countr. (1618,) p. 21.

Such the bold leaders of these lancers were. Davenant, Gondibert.

2. A lancet. Not now in use.

They cut themselves, after their manner, with knives and lancers. 1 Kings, xviii. 28.

He provoked Baal's prophets to cut themselves with knives and lancers. Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 265.

LA'NCET.† n. s. [lancette, Fr.]

1. A small pointed, chirurgical instrument.

I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wiseman, Surgery.

A vein, in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and if dexterously pricked with a lancet, emitteth a red drop. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Hippocrates saith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses. Arbuthnot.

2. A pointed window.

Here have been dug up, pieces of the mouldings of lancet windows, and other fragments of antique masonry in stone. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 17.

To LANCH. v. a. [lancer, Fr. This word is too often written launch; it is only a vocal corruption of lance. See LANCE, and To LAUNCH.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lanch the surer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore:
When Jove tremendous in the sable deeps,
Launch'd his red light'ning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.

To LANCH.* v. n. See To LAUNCH.

LANCH.* n. s. See LAUNCH.

To LA'NCINATE.† v. a. [lancino, Lat.] To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

The stitch [is] a sharp lancinating pain. Johnson, in V. Stitch.

LANCINA'TION. n. s. [from lancino, Lat.] Tearing; laceration.

LAND.† n. s. [land, Goth. lanb, Sax. and so all the Teutonick dialects. "Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.

The nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people. Spenser on Ireland.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

What had he done to make him fly the land? Shakspeare.

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotick. Broome on the Odyssey.

2. Earth; distinct from water.

By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.

Yet, if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dryden.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land,
And greet with greedy joy the Italian strand. Dryden.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land-carrack;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shakspeare.

With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden, Æn.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Addison, Freeholder.

The Phœnicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stopt not short, without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbuthnot on Coins.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbuthnot.

4. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.

Beneath his steely casque he felt the blow,
And roll'd, with limbs relax'd, along the land. Pope.

5. An estate real and immovable.

To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements,
Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knolles.

This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.

7. Urine. [hlanð, Saxon.]

Probably land-damn was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hanmer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The preceding example is a very doubtful one of this sense of land; and the passage, in which it occurs, has perplexed all the commentators on the poet. Land or lant is, however, in this sense used in Lancashire. Editor.

To LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.

The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In Britain. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryden, Horace.

Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

To LAND. v. n. To come to shore.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakspeare.

Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days. Bacon, New Atlantis.

I land, with luckless omens; then adore
Their gods. Dryden, Æn.

LANDA'U.* n. s. [probably from a vehicle of this kind used in the town of Landau in Bavaria.] A coach, of which the top may be occasionally open.

LA'NDED. adj. [from land.] Having a fortune, not in money but in land; having a real estate.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Shakspeare, K. John.

Men, whose living lyeth together in one shire, are commonly counted greater landed than those whose livings are dispersed. Bacon.

Cromwell's officers, who were for levelling lands while they had none, when they grew landed fell to crying up magna charta. Temple.

A house of commons must consist, for the most part, of landed men. Addison, Freeholder.

LA'NDFALL.† n. s. [land and fall.]

1. A sudden translation of property in land by the death of a rich man.

2. In naval language, the first land discovered after a sea-voyage.

LA'NDFLOOD. n. s. [land and flood.]. Inundation.

Apprehensions of the affections of Kent, and all other places, looked like a landflood, that might roll they knew not how far. Clarendon.

LAND-FORCES. n. s. [land and force.] Warlike powers not naval; soldiers that serve on land.

We behold in France the greatest land-forces that have ever been known under any christian prince. Temple.

LA'NDGRAVE. n. s. [land and grave, or graf, a count, German.] A German title of dominion.

LA'NDHOLDER. n. s. [land and holder.] One who holds lands.

Money, as necessary to trade, may be considered as in his hands that pays the labourer and landholder; and if this man want money, the manufacture is not made, and so the trade is lost. Locke.

LA'NDING.† }
LA'NDING-PLACE. } n. s. [from land.]

1. The top of stairs.

Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair, open newel, and a fair landing-place at the top. Bacon.

The landing-place is the uppermost step of a pair of stairs, viz. the floor of the room you ascend upon. Moxon.

There is a stair-case that strangers are generally carried to see, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably well contrived. Addison on Italy.

What the Romans called vestibulum was no part of the house, but the court and landing-place between it and the street. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The act of coming on shore.

Agricola — sent his navy to hover on the coast, and with sundry and uncertain landings to divert and disunite the Britons. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

LA'NDJOBBER. n. s. [land and job.] One who buys and sells lands for other men.

If your master be a minister of state, let him be at home to none but land-jobbers, or inventors of new funds. Swift.

LA'NDLADY. n. s. [land and lady.]

1. A woman who has tenants holding from her.

2. The mistress of an inn.

If a soldier drinks his pint, and offers payment in Wood's halfpence, the landlady may be under some difficulty. Swift.

LA'NDLESS.† adj. [from land, Sax. lanbleaꝑ.] Without property; without fortune.

Young Fortinbras
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolutes. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.
Shakspeare, K. John.

LA'NDLOCKED.† adj. [land and lock.] Shut in, or enclosed with land.

The haven before the town is land-lockt.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 100.

There are few natural parts better landlocked, and closed on all sides, than this seems to have been. Addison on Italy.

LA'NDLOPER.† n. s. [land and loopen, Dutch.] A landman; a term of reproach used by seamen of those who pass their lives on shore.

Such travellers as these may be termed landlopers, as the Dutchman saith, rather than travellers.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. (1642,) p. 187.

LA'NDLORD.† n. s. [land and lord. Sax. lanðhlaford.]

1. One who owns lands or houses, and has tenants under him.

This regard shall be had, that in no place, under any landlord, there shall be many of them placed together, but dispersed. Spenser on Ireland.

It is a generous pleasure in a landlord, to love to see all his tenants look fat, sleek, and contented. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. The master of an inn.

Upon our arrival at the inn, my companion fetched out the jolly landlord, who knew him by his whistle. Addison.

LA'NDLORDRY.* n. s. [from landlord.] State of a landlord.

Pilfering slips of petty landlordry. Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 1.

LA'NDMAN.* n. s. [land and man. Sax. lanðman.] One who lives or serves on land; opposed to seaman; a countryman.

Soldier. If to-morrow
Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The ships being so filled with landmen, there was a great want of water. Burnet, Hist of his own Time, (an. 1708.)

It often astonishes a landman to observe with what precision a sailor can distinguish, in the offing, not only the appearance of a ship, which is altogether invisible to the landman, but the number of her masts, the direction of her course, and the rate of her sailing. A. Smith, on the External Senses.

LA'NDMARK.† n. s. [land and mark. Sax. lanðmearc.] Any thing set up to preserve the boundaries of lands.

I' the midst, an altar, as the land-mark, stood,

The land-marks by which places in the church had been known, were removed. Clarendon.

Then land-marks limited to each his right;
For all before was common as the light. Dryden.

Though they are not self-evident principles, yet if they have been made out from them by a wary and unquestionable deduction, they may serve as land-marks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

LA'NDSCAPE.† n. s. [landschape, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Lanðscipe, Saxon, and our old authors write the word landskip; though Dr. Johnson has unjustly exhibited landscape as the form used by Milton. The word has been also written landscept, as if it were from the Greek verb σκέπτομαι, (skeptomai,) to look over; and in later times, rather affectedly, landschape. It is probably from the Saxon sceapian, to shape, and land, q. d. the shape of the land or country. It appears to have been a word newly introduced, when Drayton published his Polyolbion early in the reign of James the first; for, using it in his eighteenth song, p. 284., he has thought it expedient thus to explain his "landskip" in the margin, viz. "the naturall expressing of the surface of a country in painting."]

1. A region, the prospect of a country.

The pleasant varieties of these earthly landskips.
Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 9.

Straight mine eyes hath caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landskip round it measures
Russet lawns and fallows grey,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray. Milton, L'All.

Lovely seem'd,
That landskip; and of pure, now purer air,
Meets his approach. Milton, P. L.

The sun scarce uprisen,
Shot parallel to th' earth his dewy ray,
Discovering in wide landskip all the east
Of paradise, and Eden's happy plains. Milton, P. L.

We are like men entertained with the view of a spacious landscape, where the eye passes over one pleasing prospect into another. Addison.

2. A picture representing an extent of space, with the various objects in it.

The Jews indeed saw Christ presented in a land-scept, and beheld him through the perspective of faith.
Fuller, Serm. of Reformation, (Ox. 1643.) p. 8.

As good a poet as you are, you cannot make finer landscapes than those about the king's house. Addison.

Oft in her glass the musing shepherd spies
The watery landscape of the pendant woods,
And absent trees, that tremble in the floods. Pope.

The Seasons of Thomson have been very instrumental in diffusing a general taste for the beauties of nature and landschape.
Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

LA'NDSTREIGHT.* n. s. [land and streight. See the substantive STRAIT.] A narrow passage, or slip of land.

A city — seated upon seven hills, at or near unto the sea; indeed in a foreland or landstreight, where two seas meet.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 158.

LAND-TAX. n. s. [land and tax.] Tax laid upon land and houses.

If mortgages were registered, land-taxes might reach the lender to pay his proportion. Locke.

LAND-WAITER. n. s. [land and waiter.] An officer of the customs, who is to watch what goods are landed.

Give a guinea to a knavish land-waiter, and he shall connive at the merchant for cheating the queen of an hundred.
Swift, Examiner.

LA'NDWARD. adv. [from land.] Towards the land.

They are invincible by reason of the overpowering mountains that back the one, and slender fortification of the other to landward. Sandys, Trav.

LAND-WIND.* n. s. [land and wind.] A gale or wind from the land.

A sudden stiff land-wind in that self hour
To seaward forc'd this bird. Donne, Poems, p. 304.

LAND-WORKER.* n. s. [land and worker.] One who tills the ground.

The latter state, that of the land-worker, is represented as under a curse, and is made the punishment of his disobeying a positive command. Pownall on Antiq. p. 140.

LANE. n. s. [laen, Dutch; lana, Saxon.]

1. A narrow way between hedges.

All flying
Through a straight lane, the enemy full-hearted
Struck down some mortally. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn. Milton, Comus.

Through a close lane as I pursu'd my journey. Otway.

A pack-horse is driven constantly in a narrow lane and dirty road. Locke.

2. A narrow street; an alley.

There is no street, not many lanes, where there does not live one that has relation to the church. Sprat, Serm.

3. A passage between men standing on each side.

The earl's servants stood ranged on both sides, and made the king a lane. Bacon, Hen. VII.

LA'NGREL *Shot. n. s. A kind of chain-shot.

LANGTERALO'O.* n. s. A game at cards; in some places called lanterloo; and in some langtra; which Pegge takes to be French, viz. langtrois, it being often long, he says, before three cards of one suit come into a hand. But langtra seems to be an abbreviation only of langteraloo; of which name, however, I know not the origin.

An old ninepence bent both ways by Lilly the almanack-maker for luck at langteraloo. Tatler, No. 245.

LA'NGUAGE.† n. s. [language, French; lingua, Latin.]

1. Human speech.

We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and producing words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is apt signs for communication of thoughts. Holder.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

O! good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in. Shakspeare.
He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of th' others, as his own was known. Denham.

3. Style; manner of expression.

Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent. Roscommon.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women, men, for dress:
Their praise is still — the style is excellent;
The sense, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

4. A nation distinguished by their language.

To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages, that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, &c. ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up. Dan. iii. 4, 5.

To LA'NGUAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To give language to; to express. Not now in use.

A new dispute there lately rose
Betwixt the Greekes and Latines, whose
Temples should be bound with glory
In best languaging this story. Lovelace, Luc. p. 82.

LA'NGUAGED.† adj. [from the noun.]

1. Knowing language; using language properly or gracefully.

Not eloquent, nor well-languaged, [indisertus.]
Barret in V. Eloquent.
They are the only knowing men in Europe,
The only languag'd men of all the world. B. Jonson, Fox.

2. Having various languages.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
And many languag'd nations has survey'd. Pope.

LA'NGUAGE-MASTER. n. s. [language and master.] One whose profession is to teach languages.

The third is a sort of language-master, who is to instruct them in the style proper for a minister. Spectator.

LA'NGUET. n. s. [languette, French.] Any thing cut in the form of a tongue.

LA'NGUID. adj. [languidus, Latin.]

1. Faint; weak; feeble.

Whatever renders the motion of the blood languid, disposeth to an acid acrimony; what accelerates the motion of the blood, disposeth to an alkaline acrimony. Arbuthnot.

No space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Dull; heartless.

I'll hasten to my troops,
And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue. Addison.

LA'NGUIDLY. adv. [from languid.] Weakly; feebly.

The menstruum work'd as languidly upon the coral, as it did before. Boyle.

LA'NGUIDNESS.† n. s. [from languid.] Weakness; feebleness; want of strength.

Many sick, and keep up; colds without coughing or running at the nose; only a languidness and faintness.
Life of A. Wood, (an. 1678,) p. 273.

To LA'NGUISH.† v. n. [languir, French; langueo, Latin; from the Greek λαγγέω, to be weary.]

1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish
A drop of blood a-day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly. Shakspeare, Cymb.
We and our fathers do languish of such diseases. 2 Esdr.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish. Hosea, iv. 3.

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure. Shakspeare, Othello.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chuse for myself, and have ever since languished under the displeasure of an inexorable father. Addison. Spect.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which she languishes for the loss of her deceased lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck. Addison, Spect.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

What poems think you soft, and to be read
With languishing regards, and bending head? Dryden.

LA'NGUISH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act or state of pining.

There is a remedy approv'd, set down,
To cure the desperate languishes, whereof
The king is render'd lost. Shakspeare, All's Well.

2. Soft appearance.

And the blue languish of soft Allia's eye. Pope.
Then forth he walks,
Beneath the trembling languish of her beam,
With soften'd soul. Thomson, Spring.

To LA'NGUISH.* v. a. To make feeble; to cause to droop; to depress; to wear out.

What man who knows
What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
But must be, will his free hours languish out
For assur'd bondage? Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
That he might satisfy, or languish, that burning flame.
Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 495.
Cyllenius spies
How leaden sleep had seal'd up all his eyes;
Then, silent, with his magick rod he strokes
Their languish'd lights, which sounder sleep provokes.
Sandys, Ovid's Met. B. 1.
The languish'd mother's womb
Was not long a living tomb.
Milton, Epit. March. of Winchester.
Like a neglected rose,
It withers on the stalk with languish'd head. Milton, Comus.
His words their drooping cheer
The troops with hate inspir'd,
Their darts and clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languish'd war alive. Dryden.

LA'NGUISHER.* n. s. [from languish.] One who pines or languishes.

These unhappy languishers in obscurity should be furnished with such accounts of the employments of people of the world, as may engage them in their several remote corners to a laudable imitation.
Mrs. E. Carter, in Dr. Johnson's Rambler, No. 100.

LA'NGUISHING.* n. s. [from languish.] Feebleness; loss of strength.

What can we expect, but that her languishings should end in death? Decay of Chr. Piety.

LA'NGUISHINGLY.† adv. [from languishing.]

1. Weakly; feebly; with feeble softness.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhimes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow. Pope.

2. Dully; tediously.

Alas! my Dorus, thou seest how long and languishingly the weeks are past over since our last talking. Sidney.

3. With soft appearance.

Not Titian's pencil ere could so array,
So fleece with clouds the pure ethereal space;
Ne could it e'er such melting forms display,
As loose on flowery beds all languishingly lay.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence, C. I.

LA'NGUISHMENT. n. s. [languissemment, French; from languish.]

1. State of pining.

By that count, which lovers' books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains;
Which I have wasted in long languishment,
That seem'd the longer for my greater pains. Spenser.

2. Softness of mien.

Humility it expresses, by the stooping or bending of the head; languishment, when we hang it on one side. Dryden.

LA'NGUOR.† n. s. [languor, Latin; langueur, French. The early use of our word is in the sense of disease. Wicliffe renders, what in the present version is "taken with divers diseases and torments," St. Matt. iv. 24. "takum with dyverse languores and turmentis."]

1. Faintness; wearisomeness.

Well hoped I, and fair beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeem. Spenser.
For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears. Shakspeare.

2. Listlessness; inattention.

Academical disputation gives vigour and briskness to the mind thus exercised, and relieves the languor of private study and meditation. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

3. Softness; laxity.

To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales
Diffusing languor in the panting gales. Pope, Dunciad.

4. [In physick.]

Languor and lassitude signifies a faintness, which may arise from want or decay of spirits, through indigestion, or too much exercise; or from an additional weight of fluids, from a diminution of secretion by the common discharges. Quincey.

LA'NGUOROUS. adj. [langureux, Fr.] Tedious; melancholy. Not in use.

Dear lady, how shall I declare thy case,
Whom late I left in languorous constraint? Spenser.

To LA'NGURE.* v. n. [from langueo, Lat.] To languish. "Langurring in care, sorrow, or thought." Huloet. Not now in use.

The moth breedeth upon cloth and other lanifices, especially if they be laid up dankish and wet. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LA'NIGEROUS. adj. [laniger, Latin.] Bearing wool.

LANK. adj. [lancke, Dutch.]

1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakspeare.
Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack,
Lank, as an unthrift's purse. Donne.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Moist earth produces corn and grass, but both
Too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.
Let not my land so large a promise boast,
Lest the lank ears in length of stem be lost. Dryden.
Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
Till his lank purse declares his money gone. Dryden.
Meagre and lank with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together. Swift.

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphodil. Milton, Comus.

To LANK.* v. n. [from the adjective.] To become lank; to fall away.

All this
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

LA'NKLY.* adv. [from lank.] Loosely; thinly.

When forty winters more
Have furrow'd deep my pallid brow;
When from my head, a scanty store,
Lankly the wither'd tresses flow. Sir J. Hill, Song.

LA'NKNESS.† n. s. [from lank.] Want of plumpness. Sherwood.

LA'NKY.* adj. [from lank.] A vulgar expression to denote a tall thin person.

LA'NSQUENET. n. s. [Fr. from lance and knecht, Dutch.]

1. A common foot-soldier.
2. A game at cards.

LA'NTERN.† n. s. [lanterne, French; laterna, Latin: it is by mistake often written lanthorn. Dr. Johnson. — Lanthorn seems to have been written, from a confused notion that the name had some reference to the thin laminæ of horn of which it is frequently formed; quasi, lamp-horn. This etymology would infallibly be admitted, were the right one less known; and may serve as an instance of the fallacious nature of etymology. What could persuade an etymologist to give up such a derivation? especially if he recollected that a candle and lantern is called by Plautus "Vulcanus in cornu conclusus!" Nares, Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 295.]

1. A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, my lantern to my feet. Shakspeare.

Thou art our admiral; thou bearest the lantern in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the night of the burning lamp. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, none hath the preeminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon, Atlantis.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil? Milton, Comus.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand. Gov. of the Tongue.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker. More, Divine Dialogues.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high
Shines like a moon through the benighted sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addison.

3. In architecture, a kind of little dome raised over a large one, or over the roof of a building; a sort of turret full of windows, by means of which the building is illuminated. [lanternium, low Latin.]

It [the saint's bell] was usually placed where it might be heard farthest, in a lantern at the springing of the steeple. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

LA'NTERN Jaws. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth, might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace. Addison, Spect.

LANU'GINOUS. adj. [lanuginosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LA'NYARDS.* n. s. pl. In naval language, small ropes or short pieces of cord fastened to several machines in a ship; and serving to secure them in a particular place.

Call all hands to clear the wreck,
Quick the lanyards cut to pieces. G. A. Stevens, The Storm.

LAP.† n. s. [læppe, lappa, Saxon; lappe, German; lapp, pannus, Su. Goth.]

1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

He can so lightly catche him in his trappe,
Til that a man be hent right by the lappe.
Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift, Direct. to a Footman.

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees, as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid sap,
And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap. Spenser.
Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumbering
All in his mother's lap,
A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murmuring,
About him flew by hap. Spenser.
I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.
Shakspeare.

She bids you
All on the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you. Shakspeare.
Our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-wearied Antony. Shakspeare.
Heaven's almighty sire,
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours
Himself into her lap in fruitful showers. Crashaw.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began:
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne. Dryden.

To LAP.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

When the bodi was taken, Joseph lappid it in a clene sandel. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxvii.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs to keep himself from falling. Grew, Museum.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stiff like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flowering forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.
The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof
Confronted him. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakspeare.
Ever against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, Il Pens.
Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling broods upon the naked boy;
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wise contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be spread or turned over any thing.

The upper wings are opacous; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly. Grew.

To LAP. v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore. Digby on Bodies.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fox fell to lapping himself, and bade his guest heartily welcome. L'Estrange.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, but for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind by lapping. Ray on Creation.

To LAP.† v. a. To lick up.

For all the rest
They'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk. Shakspeare.

Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, him shalt thou set by himself. Judges, vii. 5.

Upon a bull
Two horrid lyons rampt, and seiz'd, and tugg'd off, bellowing still,
Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide and lapt their fill. Chapman, Iliad.

LA'PDOG. n. s. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his interest with the lady. Collier.

These, if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lap-dog sooner than their lord. Dryden.
Lap-dogs give themselves the rowsing shake,
And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake. Pope.

LAPE'L.* n. s. [from lap.] That part of the coat which wraps over; the facing. A modern word.

LA'PFUL. n. s. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.

One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage. 2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders? if it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole lapfulls on poor credulous girls. Locke.

LA'PICIDE. n. s. [lapicida, Latin.] A stonecutter. Dict.

LA'PIDARY.† n. s. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

A false diamond is not set in a ring without a subtill foyle, in such wise as the deceit of the deceiver may hardly be discovered without the help of an expert lapidary. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580,) fol. 22.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: Well (says he) this sparkling foollery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't. L'Estrange.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original. Woodward. Nat. Hist.

LA'PIDARY.* adj. Monumental; inscribed on stone.

A nobler eulogium than all the lapidary adulation of modern epitaphs. Connoisseur, No. 131.

To LA'PIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning. Dict.

LAPIDA'TION.† n. s. [lapidatio, Lat. lapidation, Fr.] A stoning.

All adulterers should be executed by lapidation: the ancienter punishment was burning: death always, though in divers forms. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

LAPI'DEOUS. adj. [lapideus, Latin.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter, before it was concreted into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned till the matter about it were condensed. Ray on the Creation.

LAPIDE'SCENCE. n. s. [lapidesco, Latin.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis ceratites, or cornu fossile, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescencies, and putrefactive mutations of hard bodies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

LAPIDE'SCENT.† adj. [lapidescens, Latin.] Growing or turning to stone.

Hardened by the air, or a certain lapidescent succus or spirit, which it meets with. Evelyn.

LAPIDIFICA'TION. n. s. [lapidification, French.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft is another degree of condensation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LAPIDI'FICK. adj. [lapidifique, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifick, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones. Grew.

LA'PIDIST. n. s. [from lapides, Latin.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stores of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray.

LA'PIS. n. s. [Latin.] A stone.

LA'PIS Lazuli.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, of an elegant blue colour, variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour: to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli. Hill.

LA'PLING.* n. s. [from lap.] A term of contempt for one wrapped up in sensual delights.

You must not stream out your youth in wine, and live a lapling to the silk and dainties. Hewytt, Serm. (1658,) p. 7.

LA'PPER. n. s. [from lap.]

1. One who wraps up.

They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor. Swift.

2. One who laps or licks.

LA'PPET. n. s. [diminutive of lap.] The parts of a head dress that hang loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, and ruffles, and mantuas! Swift.

LAPSE. n. s. [lapsus, Latin.]

1. Flow; fall; glide; smooth course.

Round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapse of murmuring streams. Milton, P. L.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Petty errour; small mistake; slight offence; little fault.

These are petty errours and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from other's lapses than their own. Glanville, Scepsis.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us. Rogers.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in style or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece. Swift.

3. Translation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens. Ayliffe.

To LAPSE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect. Swift, Lett. to the Ld. Treasurer.

2. To fail in any thing; to slip; to commit a fault.

I have ever verified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

3. To slip as by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epic poem. Addison.

4. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king. Ayliffe, Parergon.

5. To fall from perfection, truth or faith.

All publick forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsing state of human corruption. Decay of Chr. Piety.

To LAPSE. v. a.

1. To suffer to slip; to suffer to fall or be vacant.

I returned a present answer — that I would either give, or lapse, the benefice, as his majesty's gracious letters required of me. Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Troub. p. 200.

As an appeal may be deserted by the appellant's lapsing the term of law, so it may also be deserted by a lapse of the term of a judge. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To accuse; to convict of a fault. Dr. Johnson places the following example from Shakspeare under the verb neuter, with the definition of "to lose the proper time;" under which definition also he includes the preceding example from Ayliffe: but the verb in both is clearly active, and with different meanings.

The offence is not of such a bloody nature: —
It might have since been answer'd in repaying

What we took from them; which, for traffick's sake,
Most of our city did: only myself stood out:
For which, if I be lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

LA'PSED.* part. adj. [from lapse.]

1. Fallen by event.

If the legatee dies before the testator, the legacy is a lost or lapsed legacy. Blackstone.

2. Fallen from perfection, truth, or faith; ruined; lost.

Once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and enthrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires. Milton.

A sprout of that fig-tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam. Decay of Chr. Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingfleet.

3. Omitted or let slip by mistake or inadvertency.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning; no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.

LA'PWING.† n. s. [lap and wing. Dr. Johnson. — The word was at first lapwink. So Huloet calls it, in his old dictionary. And so Gower, long before: " A lapwynke made he was." Conf. Am. B. 5. And thus the Saxon lepeƿinc.] A clamorous bird with long wings.

The lapwing runs away with the shell on his head. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others eyes were worse:
Far from her nest the lapwing cries away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse. Shakspeare.

And how in fields the lapwing Tereus reigns,
The warbling nightingale in woods complains. Dryden.

LA'PWORK. n. s. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills: the ground is a packthread caul woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves. Grew, Museum.

LAR.* n. s. [Latin.] An household god.

Nor will she her dear Lar forget,
Victorious by his benefit. Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 48.

On the holy hearth
The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint. Milton, Ode Nativ.

LA'RBOARD. n. s.

The left hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head: opposed to the starboard. Harris.

Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunn'd
Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd. Milton, P. L.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,
Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.

LA'RCENY.† n. s. [larcin, Fr. latrocinium, Lat.]

Theft; robbery: and it is twofold, viz. grand and petit, i. e. great and small; that, when what is stolen exceeds, this, when it exceeds not, twelve pence in value. Bullokar.

Larciny, or theft, is distinguished by the law into two sorts; the one called simple larciny, unaccompanied with any other atrocious circumstance; and mixt or compound larciny, which also includes in it the aggravation of taking from one's house or person. Simple larciny, when it is the stealing of goods above the value of twelve pence is called grand larciny; when of goods to that value, or under, petty larciny. Blackstone.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chastise murder and petty larceny with the same punishment. Spectator.

LARCH. n. s. [larix, Lat.] A tree.

Some botanical criticks tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaëton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD.† n. s. [lardum, Latin; lard, French.]

1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry feasts,
As suddenly as lard fat thy lean beasts. Donne.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine; salted pork. Barret.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smoaking lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A savoury bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden, Ovid.

The sacrifice they sped;
Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd
To involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard. Dryden.

To LARD.† v. a. [larder, French; from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid. Dryden, Homer.

No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cockt eel. King.

2. To fatten.

And with his nuts larded many swine. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Now Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Shakspeare.

Brave soldier, doth he lie
Larding the plain? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Thirsting to revenge his naval ruins, that have larded our seas. Milton, Of Ref. B. 2.

3. To mix with something else by way of improvement.

An exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Let no alien interpose
To lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose. Dryden.

He lards with flourishes his long harangue,
'Tis fine, sayst thou. Dryden.

Swearing by heaven; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much larded with it. Collier, View of the Stage.

To LARD. v. n. To grow fat.

In the furrow by, where Ceres lies much spill'd,
The unwieldy larding swine, his maw then having fill'd,
Lies wallowing in the mire. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 14.

LA'RDER. n. s. [lardier, old French; from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.

This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool; whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer. Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,
Of veal a lucid loin. Dorset.

Old age,
Morose, perverse in humour, diffident
The more he still abounds, the less content:
His larder and his kitchen too observes,
And now, lest he should want hereafter, starves. King.

LA'RDERER. n. s. [from larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LA'RDON. n. s. [French.] A bit of bacon.

LA'RDRY.* n. s. [from larder.] Place in which victuals are kept.

I have, sweet wench, a piece of cheese, as good as teeth may chaw,
And bread — and therewith all did draw
His lardry. Warner, Albion's England, (1602.)

LARE.* n. s. [Sax. lane, læne.] Learning; scholarship. North of England. See LERE.

LARGE.† adj. [large, French; largus, Latin.]

That uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguil'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Milton, P. L.

5. Copious; diffuse.

Skippon gave a large testimony under his hand, that they had carried themselves with great civility. Clarendon.

I might be very large upon the importance and advantages of education, and say a great many things which have been said before. Felton on the Classicks.

6. At Large. Without restraint; without confinement.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large. Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
Reduc'd their shapes immense; and were at large,
Though without number still. Milton, P. L.

The children are bred up in their father's way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large. Sprat.

Your zeal becomes importunate;
I've hitherto permitted it to rave
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it. Addison.

7. At Large. Diffusely; in the full extent.

Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakspeare.

It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large. Watts.

La'rgely. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely; amply.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations. Watts on the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:
How largely gives; how splendidly he treats. Dryden.

Those, who in warmer climes complain,
From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own, that pain is largely paid
By generous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly; without sparing.

They their fill of love, and love's disport
Took largely; of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton, P. L.

La'rgeness.✝ n. s. [from large.]

1. Bigness; bulk.

London excells any other city in the whole world, either in largeness, or number of inhabitants. Sprat.

Nor must Bumastus his old honours lose,
In length and largeness like the dugs of cows. Dryden.

2. Liberality.

Out of covetyse into largenes. Lib. Festiv. fol. 27. b.

3. Greatness; comprehension.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

4. Extension; amplitude.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in most sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

The ample proposition that hope makes,
In all designs begun on earth below,
Falls in the promised largeness. Shakspeare.

Knowing best the largeness of my own heart toward my people's good and just contentment. King Charles.

Shall grief contract the largeness of that heart,
In which nor fear nor anger has a part. Waller.

Man as far transcends the beasts in largeness of desire, as dignity of nature and employment. Glanville, Apology.

If the largeness of a man's heart carry him beyond prudence, we may reckon it illustrious weakness. L'Estrange.

5. Wideness.

Supposing that the multitude and largeness of rivers ought to continue as great as now; we can easily prove, that the extent of the ocean could be no less. Bentley.

Largehe'artedness.* n. s. Largeness of heart. See the fourth sense of Largeness.

In regard of reasonable and spiritual desires, the effects of this affection are large-heartedness and liberality. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

La'rgess. n. s. [largesse, Fr.] A present; a gift; a bounty.

Our coffers with too great a court,
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light. Shakspeare.

He assigned two thousand ducats, for a bounty to me and my fellows: for they give great largesses where they come. Bacon, New Atlantis.

A pardon to the captain, and a largess
Among the soldiers, had appeas'd their fury. Denham.

The paltry largess too severely watch'd,
That no intruding guests usurp a share. Dryden, Juv.

Irus's condition will not admit of largesses. Addison.

Largi'tion. n. s. [largitio, Lat.] The act of giving. Dict.

LARK.✝ n. s. [laƿeṗc, laṗeṗc, Saxon; which Wachter deduces from the Celt. lief, voice, and orka, to avail; lerk, Danish; lawerick, Belg. laverock, Scottish, and also among our own old writers.] A small singing bird.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakspeare.

Look up a height, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark. Cowley.

Mark how the lark and linnet sing;
With rival notes
They strain their warbling throats.
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

La'rker. n. s. [from lark.] A catcher of larks. Dict.

La'rklike.* adj. [lark and like.] Resembling the manner of a lark.

Pride, like an eagle, builds among the stars,
But pleasure, larklike, nests upon the ground. Young, Night Th. 5.

La'rksheel.* n. s. A name for the flower called Indian cress.

The Indian-cress our climate now does bear,
Call'd larksheel 'cause he wears a horseman's spur. Tate's Cowley.

La'rkspur.✝ n. s. [delphinium.] A plant.

With the same weapon, larkspur, thou dost mount
Amongst the flowers, a knight of high account. Tate's Cowley.

La'rvated. adj. [larvatus, Lat.] Masked. Dict.

La'rum. n. s. [from alarum or alarm.]

1. Alarm; noise noting danger.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time. Spenser.

The peaking cornute, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the instant of our encounter. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

How far off lie these armies?
— Within a mile and half.
— Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours. Shakspeare.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours, as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and have a continual larum bell in his ears. Howell, Voc. Forest.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others, that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five. Locke on Education.

The young Æneas, all at once let down,
Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town. Pope, Dunciad.

LARY'NGOTOMY. n. s. [λάρυγξ and τέμνω; laryngotomie, Fr.] An operation where the fore part of the larynx is divided to assist respiration, during large tumours upon the upper parts; as in a quinsey. Quincy.

LA'RYNX.† n. s. [λάρυγξ.]

1. The upper part of the trachea, which lies below the root of the tongue, before the pharynx. Quincy.

There are thirteen muscles for the motion of the five cartilages of the larynx. Derham.

2. In botany, the larch.

The larynx is as frequent upon the mountains in this country, as the white pine, or common Scotch fir. Drummond, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1744,) p. 16.

LA'SCAR.* n. s. A native seaman, or a native gunner, of India.

LASCI'VIENCY.* n. s. [from lasciviens, Lat.] Wantonness.

Men, by letting themselves loose to all manner of wretchedness and debauchery, through the potent and enormous lasciviency of the bodily life, quite lose the relish and grateful sense of true goodness and nobility. Hallywell, Melampr. (1681,) p. 9.

LASCI'VIENT.† adj. [lasciviens, Lat.] Frolicksome; wantoning.

The various toyings — of the lascivient life. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 46.

LASCI'VIOUS. adj. [lascivus, Lat.]

1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?
— Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shakspeare.

He on Eve
Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him
As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn. Milton, P. L.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable difficulties which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the lascivious man to throw off his lewd amours, and all their giant-like objections against christianity shall presently vanish. South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

LASCI'VIOUSLY.† adv. [from lascivious.] Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

Many men are so lasciviously given, either out of a depraved nature, or too much liberty. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 606.

Laciviously decked like a courtesan. Wotton on Architecture.

She looked upon him amorously, or rather lasciviously. Patrick on Gen. xxxix. 9.

LASCI'VIOUSNESS. n. s. [from lascivious.] Wantonness; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his elegies, and his art of love. Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

LASH.† n. s. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence slash and lash. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke gives a very different and forced etymon, to which few will subscribe: he calls a lash, Fr. lasche, that part of a whip which is let loose, let go, cast out, thrown out; the past participle of Fr. lascher, Ital. lasciare! Divers. of Purley, ii. 32. — It is the German laschen, to lash; lasche, is a flap, a bit of leather, a leash.]

1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden.

Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.

2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of cricket's bone, her lash of film,
Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat. Shakspeare.

I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it. Addison.

3. A leash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare: out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lash,
With losses on every side. Tusser, Husbandry.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.

The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. L'Estrange.

To LASH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France. Shakspeare.

He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.

And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden, Hor.

Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden, Pers.

Leaning on his lance, he mounts his car,
His fiery coursers lashing through the air. Garth, Ovid.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.

The club hung round his ears, and batter'd brows;
He falls; and lashing up his heels, his rider throws. Dryden.

3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.

The winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frighted shores. Prior.

4. To scourge with satire.

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain,
Flatt'rers and bigots ev'n in Louis' reign. Pope, Hor.

5. To tie any thing down to the side or mast of a ship: properly to lace.

To LASH.† v. n. To ply the whip, or any weapon held in the hand.

He through long sufferance growing now more great,
Rose in his strength, and gan her fresh assayle
Heaping huge strokes as thicke as showre of hayle,
And lashing dreadfully at ev'ry part,
As if he thought her soule to disentrayle. Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 16.

They lash aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at ev'ry stroke. Dryden, Æn.

Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden, Pers.

Let men out of their way lash on ever so fast, they are not at all the nearer their journey's end. South.

Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;
The lashing whip resounds. Gay, Trivia.

Lash-free.* adj. [lash and free.] Free from the stroke of satire.

I with this whip you see
Do lash the time, and am myself lash-free. B. Jonson, Masques.

To LASH *out. v. n. [perhaps from the Goth. lausgan, to let loose.] To break out; to be extravagant; to become unruly. Our old lexicographers, Huloet and Barret, give the word with out; but it is also used in this sense by itself.

We know not what rich joys we lose, when first we lash into a new offence. Feltham, Res. ii. 40.

A pious education may lay such strong fetters, such powerful restrictions, upon the heart, that it shall not be able to lash out into those excesses and enormities, which the more licentious and debauched part of the world wallow in. South, Serm. x. 347.

La'sher.† n. s. [from lash.] One that whips or lashes. Sherwood.

La'shing *out. n. s. [from lash.] Extravagance; unruliness.

The lashings out of his luxury. South, Serm. ix. 72.

Lask.* n. s. [from laxus, Lat.] A looseness; a lax, as our old dictionaries call it; a flux. It is still spoken of cattle.

A grave and learned minister, was one day, as he walked in the fields for his recreation, suddenly taken with a laske or looseness. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 99.

LASS. n. s. [from lad is formed laddess, by contraction lass. Hickes.] A girl; a maid; a young woman: used now only of mean girls.

Now was the time for vigorous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Waller.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. L'Estrange.

They sometimes an hasty kiss
Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, resent. Philips.

La'ssitude.† n. s. [lassitudo, Latin; lassitude, French. This word seems to have been established about 1540. Sir T. Elyot, speaking of "two dyscrasies of the body, crudity and lassitude," says, "which althoughe they be wordes made of Latyne, havynge none apte Englyshe worde therefore, yet by the definitions and more ample declaration of them they shall be understanded sufficiently, and from henceforthe used for Englishe." Castel of Health, 1541, fol. 74. b.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Assiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glanville, Scepsis.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More, Antid. against Atheism.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired. Watts Impr. of the Mind.

From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran,
And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope, Odyss.

2. [In physick.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distempered state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest: it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.

La'sslorn. n. s. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Broom groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor loves,
Being lasslorn. Shakspeare, Tempest.

LAST. adj. [latert, laꞅt, Saxon; laatst, Dutch.]

1. Latest; that which follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back? 2 Sam. xix. 11.

O, may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire! Pope.

2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.

Merion pursued at greater distance still,
Last came Admetus, thy unhappy son. Pope.

3. Beyond which there is no more.

I will slay the last of them with the sword. Amos, ix. 1.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

The swans, that on Cayster often tried
Their tuneful songs, now sung their last, and died. Addison.

O! may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing. Addison.

But, while I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear. Prior.

Here, last of Britons, let your names be read. Pope.

Wit not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

4. The lowest; the meanest.

Antilochus
Takes the last prize, and takes it with a jest. Pope.

5. Next before the present; as, last week.

6. Utmost.

Fools ambitiously contend
For wit and power; their last endeavours bend
To outshine each other. Dryden, Lucret.

7. At Last. In conclusion; at the end.

Gad, a troop shall overcome him; but he shall overcome at the last. Gen. xlix. 19.

Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with every blast,
Grown old, and destitute of oil,
Rust to a point, and fix at last. Freind.

8. The Last; the end.

All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

Last. adv.

To LAUD. v. a. [laudo, Lat.] To praise; to celebrate.

O thou almighty and eternal Creator, having considered the heavens the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained, with all the company of heaven, we laud and magnify thy glorious name. Bentley.

LAUDABI'LITY.* n. s. [from laudable.] Praise-worthiness.

Names — instructive by the laudability of their characters, and the persuasiveness of their precepts. Mem. of Abp. Tennison, p. 5.

LA'UDABLE. adj. [laudabilis, Lat.]

1. Praise-worthy; commendable.

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; but to do good, sometime
Accounted dang'rous folly. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Affectation endeavours to correct natural defects, and has always the laudable aim of pleasing, though it always misses it. Locke.

2. Healthy; salubrious.

Good blood, and a due projectile motion or circulation, are necessary to convert the aliment into laudable animal juices. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LA'UDABLENESS. n. s. [from laudable.] Praise-worthiness.

LA'UDABLY. adv. [from laudable.] In a manner deserving praise.

Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when either they are sounding or significant. Dryden.

LA'UDANUM. n. s. [A cant word, from laudo, Latin.] A soporifick tincture.

LAUDA'TION.* n. s. [laudatio, Lat.] Praise; honour paid. Not in use.

I see Anna with virgynes disposed
Meekly as now to your sonnys laudacion.
Parfre's Morality of Candlemas-Day, (1512.)

LA'UDATIVE.* n. s. [laudativus, Lat.] Panegyrick.

My lords, I mean to make no panegyrick, or laudative. Bacon, Charge against J. S.

The first was a commendation, or laudative, of monarchy. Bacon, Speech in Parliament.

LA'UDATORY.* adj. [laudatorius, Lat.] Containing praise; bestowing praise.

This psalm is hortatory, stirring up to the praises of God: and it is laudatory, setting forth and celebrating the power and greatness of God, for which he is to be praised. Udall, Serm. (1642,) p. 1.

Their benedictions, or laudatory prayers. Chilmead, Hist. of the Jews, (1650.) p. 23.

Panegyrical, laudatory, containing praise. Johnson, in V. Encomiastick.

LA'UDATORY.* n. s. That which contains or bestows praise.

I will not fail to give ye, readers, a present taste of him from his title, hung out like a tolling sign-post to call passengers, not simply a confutation, but "a modest confutation," with a laudatory of itself obtruded in the very first word. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

LA'UDER.* n. s. [from laud.] A praiser; a commender. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To LAVE.† v. a. [lavo, Latin; from the Gr. λόω, contracted from λοέω, to wash; with the Eolick digamma, λοϜέω, changing o into a. So the Latins say lavare and lavere, perf. lavi, sup. lautum and lotum. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.]

1. To wash; to bathe.

Unsafe, that we must lave our honours
In these so flatt'ring streams. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

But as I rose out of the laving stream,
Heaven open'd her eternal doors, from whence
The spirit descended on me like a dove. Milton. P. R.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Whose low-laid mouths each mounting billow laves,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryden.

2. [Lever, Fr.] To throw up; to lade; to draw out.

Though hills were set on hills,
And seas met seas to guard thee, I would through:
I'd plough up rocks, steep as the Alps, in dust,
And lave the Tyrrhene waters into clouds,
But I would reach thy head. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,
Another bolder yet the yard bestrides,
And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
Th' intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves. Dryden.

To LAVE. v. n. To wash himself; to bathe.

In her chaste current oft the goddess laves
And with celestial tears augments the waves. Pope.

To LAVE'ER.† v. n. [from veeren, Dutch.] To change the direction often in a course.

[He,] like the fam'd ship of Trevere,
Did on the shore himself lavere.
Lovelace, Luc. Posth. (1659,) p. 17.

How easy 'tis when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind:
But those that 'gainst stiff gales laveering go,
Must be at once resolv'd, and skilful too. Dryden, Astr. Redux.

LA'VENDER.† n. s. [lavendula, Lat. "à lavo, quia in lavacris ac lotionibus expetatur." Vossius.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper lip, standing upright, is roundish, and, for the most part, bifid; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorles, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Miller.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aromatick smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalick, nervous, and uterine medicine. Hill, Materia Medica.

And then again he turneth to his play,
To spoil the pleasures of that paradise:
The wholesome sage, and lavender still gray,
Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes. Spenser, Muiop.

LA'VER.† n. s. [lavoir, French; from lave.]

1. A washing vessel.

He gave her to his daughters, to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphodil. Milton, Comus.

Let us go find the body where it lies
Soak'd in his enemies blood, and from the stream
With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
The clodded gore. Milton, S. A.

Young Aretus from forth his bridal bow'r
Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour. Pope, Odyss.

2. A washer. Obsolete. Huloet.

LA'VEROCK.* n. s. [lauerc, Saxon.] A lark. See LARK.

Flocks
Of turtles, and of laverockes. Chaucer, Rom. R. 662.

See a black-bird feed her young,
Or a leverock build her nest. Walton, Angler's Wish.

To LAUGH.† v. n. [hlahjan, Gothick; hlihan, hlahan, Saxon; lachen, Germ. and Dutch; all which may be referred to the Greek γελάω, to laugh; the digamma F being inserted between two vowels.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Shakspeare.

There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried, Murther!
They wak'd each other. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

At this fusty stuff
The large Achilles, on his prest-bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakspeare.

Laughing causeth a continued expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughing, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if it be violent. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well; the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The vallies shall stand so thick with corn, that they shall laugh and sing. Ps. lxv. 14.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd. Dryden.

The plenteous board, high heap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.

To LAUGH.† v. a.

1. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A wicked soul shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies. Ecclus. vi. 4.

2. To LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule. Dr. Johnson places this improperly as a verb neuter.

Presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in thee at others lives may laugh. Shakspeare.

'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laugh'd at. Shakspeare.

The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find, that they are merry at their own expence. Addison.

No wit to flatter left of all his store;
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

Laugh. n. s. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope, Spring.

Laugh-worthy.* adj. Deserving to be laughed at.

They laugh'd at his laugh-worthy fate. B. Jonson, Epigrams.

Laugh and lay down.* A game at cards.

Fye on this winning alway;
Now nothing but pay, pay,
With laugh and lay downe,
Borough, citie, and towne. Skelton, Poems, p. 168.

La'ughable. adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Shakspeare.

Casaubon confesses Persius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer. Dryden, Juv.

La'ugher. n. s. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

I am a common laugher. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Some sober men cannot be of the general opinion, but the laughers are much the majority. Pope.

La'ughingly.† adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

He tolde maister Bradford, that he had made the Bishop of London afraide: for, saith he laughingly, his chapleine gave him counsell not to strike me with his crosier staffe, for that I would strike again; and by my troth, said he, rubbing his handes, I made him believe I would do so indeed. Fox, Acts and Mon. of Dr. R. Taylor.

La'ughingstock. n. s. [laugh and stock.] A butt; an object of ridicule.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
The laughingstock of fortune's mockerie. Spenser.

Pray you let us not be laughingstocks to other men's humours. Shakspeare.

Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughingstock at once. L'Estrange.

La'ughter n. s. [from laugh.] Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear,
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We find not that the laughter loving dame
Mourn'd for Anchises. Waller.

Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology. It may be plausibly derived from to lave, to throw out; as profundere opes is to be lavish.]

1. Prodigal: wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence. Dryden.

The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And fed him till he loaths. Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse: as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, curbing his lavish spirit. Shakspeare.

To La'vish. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not the impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands? Addison.

La'visher.† n. s. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

Tertullian very truly observeth, God is not a lavisher, but a dispenser, of his blessings. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 189.

Let those lavishers, that made the covetous their voiders, live so thriftily as to pay their debts in their life-time; so may they deprive their executors of a trouble. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 209.

La'vishly. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.

Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it chears and revives; but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him. Pope.

La'vishment.† } La'vishness. } n. s. [from lavish.] Prodigality; profusion.

First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishness. Spenser, F. Q.

There seems to be a profusion and lavishness of the particles in some places of the noblest classicks. Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 225.

Launce.* See Lance.

To LAUNCH.† v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force. See To Lanch.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.

Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. St Luke, v. 4.

So short a stay prevails;
He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.

For general history, Ralegh and Howel are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whear. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind. Davies.

Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with submissive imitation: he launches out into very flowery paths, which still conduct him into one great road. Prior, Pref. to Solomon.

He had not acted in the character of a suppliant, if he had launched out into a long oration. Broome on the Odyssey.

I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbuthnot.

3. To plunge into: as, the man launched into an expensive way of living.

To Launch. v. a.

1. To push to sea.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England. King Charles.

With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on leavers, launch'd her in the deep. Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written lauch or lance.

The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His writhen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook. Dryden.

LAUNCH.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of putting a ship out of the dock, and launching her into the water.

2. A particular kind of long-boat.

LAUND.† n. s. [lande, French; landa, Span. land, Dan. llan, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Originally, a plain not ploughed. The old form of writing lawn.

There was the hart ywont to have his flight:—
This duke wil have a cours at him or twey
With houndes, &c.
And when this duke was comen to the launde, &c.
Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,
For through this laund anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand. Shakspeare.

About the launds and wastes, both far and near.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

That grove for ever green, that conscious lawnd.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

LA'UNDER.* n. s. [lavandiere, French, a laundress; and thus Chaucer calls Envy a lavender, in his Rom. of the Rose. The same word is applied to women in Arnold's Chronicle, fol. 193. Thus also our old lexicography calls "a launder, a womanwasher." Huloet. Skinner's supposition, therefore, that our laundress may be formed from such a French word as lavanderesse, is needless. Laundress is, no doubt, from this hitherto unnoticed word launder.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

This effeminate love of a woman doth so womanize a man, that, if he yield to it, it will not only make him an Amazon, but a launder, a distaff-spinner, or whatsoever other vile occupation their idle heads can imagine, and their weak hands perform. Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

To LA'UNDER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To wash; to wet.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laundering the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears.
Shakspeare, Lov. Complaint.

If 'twere prun'd, and starch'd, and launder'd,
And cut square by the Russian standard. Hudibras, ii. 1.

LA'UNDERER.* n. s. [from launder.] A man that follows the business of washing.

He is a launderer of souls, and tries them, as men do witches, by water. Butler, Rem. ii. 386.

LA'UNDRESS.† n. s. [lavandiere, French: Skinner imagines that lavandaresse may have been the old word. Dr. Johnson.—It will be rather admitted that laundress is from launder. See LAUNDER.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

The countess of Richmond would often say, On condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Camden.

Take up these clothes here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead. Shakspeare.

The laundress must be sure to tear her smocks in the washing, and yet wash them but half. Swift.

To LA'UNDRESS.* v. n. To do the work of a laundress. Not in use.

Their wives are used to dress their meat, to laundress.
Blount, Voy. to the Levant, (1650,) p. 26.

LA'UNDRY. n. s. [as if lavanderie.]

1. The room in which clothes are washed.

The affairs of the family ought to be consulted, whether they concern the stable, dairy, the pantry, or laundry. Swift.

2. The act or state of washing.

Chalky water is too fretting, as appeareth in laundry of cloaths, which wear out apace. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LAVO'LTA.† n. s. [la volte, French. Dr. Johnson.—Rather the Italian la volta, being brought, with other feats of capering, from Italy. It means literally the turn. It is written also lavolto and lavolt.] An old dance in which was much turning and much capering. Hanmer.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt; nor sweeten talk;
Nor play at subtle games. Shakspeare.

They bid us—to the English dancing schools,
And teach lavoltas high, and swift corantoes.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Ixion is—turned dancer, and leads lavoltoes with the Lamiæ.
B. Jonson, Masques.

A homely Venus attired like a Bacchanal, attended by many morris-dancers, began to caper and frisk their best lavoltoes, so as every limb strove to exceed each other.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

To LA'UREATE.* v. a. [laureatus, Lat. from laureo.] To crown with laurel. Cockeram.

Skelton was laureated at Oxford, and in the year 1493 was permitted to wear his laurel at Cambridge.
Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 130.

LA'UREATE.† adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.

To Rome again repaireth Julius
With his triumphe laureat full hie. Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Then is he decked as poete laureate.
Barklay, Eglog. iv. (1570.)

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat hearse where Lycid lies. Milton, Lycidas.

From the laureat fraternity of poets, riper years and the ceaseless round of study and reading led me to the shady spaces of philosophy. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Pope.

LA'UREATE.* n. s. One crowned with laurel. In King Edward the Fourth's time it is the appellation of the king's poet, who was then first so called; and the laureate still continues to be the title of his successors. At "the degrees in grammar, which included rhetorick and versification, anciently taken in our universities, particularly at Oxford; a wreath of laurel was presented to the new graduate, who was afterwards usually styled poeta laureatus." Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, vol. ii. p. 129.

The full sense of a learned laureate.
Cleaveland, Poems, p. 66.

The flourishing wreaths by laureats worne.
Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 526.

Few verses touch their nicer ear,
They scarce can bear their laureate twice a year.
Pope, Hor. Sat. i.

Nor yet the laureat's crown
In thought exclude him! Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

LAUREA'TION.† n. s. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowery crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients. Dr. Johnson.—It is so used, in reference to the degrees conferred by our own universities.

The scholastick laureations seem to have given rise to the appellation in question. I will give some instances at Oxford.
Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 129.

LA'UREL. n. s. [laurus, Lat. laurier, French.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.

The laurus or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree. Ainsworth.

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerours,
And poets sage. Spenser, F. Q.

The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree. Mortimer, Husbandry.

LA'URELLED.† adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel; laureate.

Upon your sword
Sits laurell'd victory. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

That true enthusiasm which transports and elevates the souls of poets above the middle region of vulgar conceptions, and makes them soar up to heaven to touch the stars with their laurelled heads. Howell, Lett. i. v. 16.

Hear'st thou the news? my friend! the express is come
With laurell'd letters from the camp to Rome. Dryden.

Then future ages with delight shall see
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, looks agree;
Or in fair series laurell'd bards be shown
A Virgil there, and here an Addison. Pope.

LA'URUSTINE.* } n. s. [laurustinus, Lat.] An ever-
LAURUSTI'NUS. } green shrub, which flowers about Michaelmas, and holds its flowers through the winter.

A laurustine bear in blossom, with a juniper hunter in berries. Guardian, No. 173.

The dusky bay, and laurustinus bright. Anonymous.

LAW.† n. s. [laʒa, Saxon; loi, French; lawgh, Erse. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson might have added the Saxon form of lah; the Swedish lag; the Iceland. lag, laug, log; the Dan. low; and the old Fr. ley. Mr. H. Tooke deduces this word from the Goth. and Sax. lagjan, and leczan, ponere, to lay down, to deliver, to decree; a derivation which indeed had been made half a century before the Diversions of Purley were given to the world. See Wachter in V. LAGE: where this word is found in its several northern forms, and with this remark, which Mr. Tooke has imitated: "quibus sono et significatu convenit Lat. lex. Cuncta à legen, ponere, statuere, constituere, judice Stiernhielmio in Gloss. Ulph. Goth. p. 104. Quid enim est lex, nisi statutum vel constitutio, sive ipsius Dei et naturæ, sive populi seipsum obligantis, sive principis populum moderantis?"]

1. A rule of action.

That which doth assign unto each thing the kind, that which doth moderate the force and power, that which doth appoint the form and measure of working; the same we term a law. Hooker, i. § 2.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause. Dryden.

2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publickly established as a rule of justice.

Ordain them laws, part such as appertain
To civil justice, part religious rites. Milton, P. L.

Our nation would not give laws to the Irish, therefore now the Irish gave laws to them. Davies on Ireland.

3. A decree authoritatively annexing rewards or punishments to certain actions.

So many laws argue so many sins. Milton, P. L.

Laws politique among men presuming man to be rebellious. Hooker.

4. Judicial process.

When every case in law is right. Shakspeare.

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power. Shakspeare.

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body: there is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions Addison, Spect.

5. A distinct edict or rule.

One law is split into two. Baker on Learning.

6. Conformity to law; any thing lawful.

In a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen. Shakspeare, Coriol.

7. The rules or axioms of science; as, the laws of mechanicks.

8. An established and constant mode or process; a fixed correspondence of cause and effect: as, the laws of magnetism.

Natural agents have their law. Hooker.

I dy'd, whilst in the womb he stay'd,
Attending Nature's law. Shakspeare, Cymb.

9. The Mosaical institution: distinguished from the gospel.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by these shadowy expiations. Milton.

10. The books in which the Jewish religion is delivered: distinguished from the prophets.

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets. St. Matt. vii. 12.

11. A particular form or mode of trying and judging; as, law martial, law mercantile: the ecclesiastical law whereby we are governed.

12. Jurisprudence; the study of law: as, a doctor of law.

LA'WBREAKER.* n. s. [law and breaker; Sax. lahbpeca.] One who violates a law.

Thou art a robber,
A lawbreaker, a villain. Shakspeare, Cymb.

In this chapter he shews, how they were the lawbreakers. Milton, Tetrachordon.

LA'WDAY.* n. s. A day of open court; a solemn court of a county or hundred.

Keep leets and lawdays, and in sessions sit. Shakspeare, Othello.

LA'WFUL. adj. [law and full.] Agreeable to law; conformable to law; allowed by law; legitimate; legal.

It is not lawful for thee to have her. St. Matt. xiv. 4.

Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father, than my daughters got 'tween the lawful sheets. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

LA'WFULLY. adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeably to law.

This bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour doth take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, restrain a man. South.

I may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it. Dryden, Ded. to Juvenal.

LA'WFULNESS. n. s. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.

It were an error to speak further, till I may see some sound foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action. Bacon.

LA'WGIVER. n. s. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.

Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation. Bacon.

A law may be very reasonable in itself, although one does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

LA'WGIVING.† adj. [law and giving.] Legislative.

The indiminishable majesty of our highest court, the lawgiving and sacred parliament. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compell'd. Milton, P. L.

Orpheus did not, as poets feign, tame savage beasts,
But men as lawless, and as wild as they. Roscommon.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wandering walks in open air. Dryden, Æn.

Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
They own'd a lawless savage liberty,
Like that our painted ancestors so priz'd,
Ere empire's arts their breasts had civiliz'd. Dryden.

He meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd. Pope.

2. Contrary to law; illegal.

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
He needs no indirect nor lawless course
To cut off those that have offended him. Shakspeare.

We cite our faults,
That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives. Shakspeare.

Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
Thou of my blood who bear'st the Julian name. Dryden.

LA'WLESSLY. adv. [from lawless.] In a manner contrary to law.

Stern beasts in trains that by his truncheon fell,
Now grisly forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell. Pope.

Interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.

2. [Linon, French.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.

Should'st thou bleed,
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair. Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn. Pope.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire;
The duties by the lawn rob'd prelate pay'd,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickell.

LAWN.* adj. Made of lawn; resembling lawn.

Look on those lips,
Those now lawn pillows, on whose tender softness
Chaste modest speech, stealing from out his breast,
Had wont to rest itself. Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

The chimere or upper robe, to which the lawn sleeves are generally sewed. Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer.

LA'WSUIT. n. s. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the priest a right to the tithe would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide. Swift.

LA'WYER.† n. s. [from law. Dr. Johnson. — It must be added, that our old word was not lawyer, but lawer. Thus Huloet, in his old dictionary: "Lawer, or man of law, causidicus." And thus Bale, in Leland's Newe Year's Gift. "To locke up the gates of true knowledge, from them that affectuously seketh it to the glory of God, is a property belongynge only to the hypocrytysh Pharisees and false lawers." Thus the Sax. lahman.] Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It is like the breath of an unfee'd lawyer, you gave me nothing for it. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office swerve from it? Whitgift.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and reverend discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers. Bacon, Holy War.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's council rose;
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact. Swift.

LA'WYERLY.* adj. [from lawyer.] Judicial.

The more lawyerly mooting of this point. Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 5.

They saw the happiness of a private life, but they thought they had not yet enough to make them happy, they would have more, and laid in to make their solitude luxurious. Dryden.

Readers, who are in the flower of their youth, should labour at those accomplishments which may set off their persons when their bloom is gone, and to lay in timely provisions for manhood and old age. Addison, Guardian.

47. To LAY on. To apply with violence.

We make no excuses for the obstinate: blows are the proper remedies; but blows laid on in a way different from the ordinary. Locke on Education.

48. To LAY open. To shew; to expose.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak,
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errours, feeble, shallow weak,
The folded meaning of your word's deceit. Shakspeare.

A fool layeth open his folly. Prov. xiii. 16.

49. To LAY over. To incrust; to cover; to decorate superficially.

Wo unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb stone, Arise, it shall teach: behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it. Habb. ii. 19.

50. To LAY out. To expend.

Fathers are wont to lay up for their sons,
Thou for thy son art bent to lay out all. Milton, S. A.

Tycho Brahe laid out, besides his time and industry, much greater sums of money on instruments than any man we ever heard of. Boyle.

The blood and treasure that's laid out,
Is thrown away, and goes for nought. Hudibras.

If you can get a good tutor, you will never repent the charge; but will always have the satisfaction to think it the money, of all other, the best laid out. Locke.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden

My father never at a time like this
Would lay out his great soul in words, and waste
Such precious moments. Addison, Cato.

A melancholy thing to see the disorders of a household that is under the conduct of an angry stateswoman, who lays out all her thoughts upon the publick, and is only attentive to find out miscarriages in the ministry. Addison, Freeholder.

When a man spends his whole life among the stars and planets, or lays out a twelvemonth on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque. Addison on Anc. Medals.

Nature has laid out all her art in beautifying the face; she has touched it with vermilion, planted in it a double row of ivory, and made it the seat of smiles and blushes. Addison.

51. To LAY out. To display; to discover.

He was dangerous, and takes occasion to lay out bigotry, and false confidence, in all its colours. Atterbury.

55. To LAY to. To charge upon.

When we began, in courteous manner, to lay his unkindness unto him, he, seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

56. To LAY to. To apply with vigour.

Let children be hired to lay to their bones,
From fallow as needeth, to gather up stones. Tusser.

We should now lay to our hands to root them up, and cannot tell for what. Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

57. To LAY to. To harass; to attack.

The great master having a careful eye over every part of the city, went himself unto the station, which was then hardly laid to by the Bassa Mustapha. Knolles.

Whilst he this, and that, and each man's blow,
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore;
Backwards he bears. Daniel, Civ. Wars.

58. To LAY together. To collect; to bring into one view.

If we lay all these things together, and consider the parts, rise, and degrees of his sin, we shall find that it was not for nothing. South.

Many people apprehend danger for want of taking the true measure of things, and laying matters rightly together. L'Estrange.

My readers will be very well pleased, to see so many useful hints upon this subject laid together in so clear and concise a manner. Addison, Guardian.

One series of consequences will not serve the turn, but many different and opposite deductions must be examined, and laid together, before a man can come to make a right judgement of the point in question. Locke.

59. To LAY under. To subject to.

A Roman soul is bent on higher views
To civilize the rude unpolish'd world,
And lay it under the restraint of laws. Addison, Cato.

60. To LAY up. To confine to the bed or chamber.

In the East Indies, the general remedy of all subject to the gout, is rubbing with hands till the motion raise a violent heat about the joints: where it was chiefly used, no one was ever troubled much, or laid up by that disease. Temple.

61. To LAY up. To store; to treasure; to reposit for future use.

9. To LAY upon. To importune; to request with earnestness and incessantly. Obsolete.

All the people laid so earnestly upon him to take that war in hand, that they said they would never bear arms more against the Turks, if he omitted that occasion. Knolles.

LAY.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A row; a stratum; a layer; one rank in a series, reckoned upwards.

A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, as close to the belly as the lute, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge as in ordinary viols, that the upper strings strucken might make the lower resound. Bacon.

Upon this they lay a layer of stone, and upon that a lay of wood. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A wager.

My fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before. Shakspeare, Othello.

It is thy just grief, that thou missest of the hearing of many good words: It is thy happiness, that thou art freed from the hearing of many evil. It is an even lay betwixt the benefit of hearing good, and the torment of hearing evil. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

It is esteemed an even lay whether any man lives ten years longer: I suppose it is the same, that one of any ten might die within one year. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

3. Station; rank. Not in use.

Welcome unto thee, renowned Turk,
Not for thy lay, but for thy worth in arms.
Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

Lay. n. s. [ley, leaȝ, Saxon; ley, Scottish.] Grassy ground; meadow; ground unplowed, and kept for cattle; more frequently, and more properly written lea.

A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay
They saw. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

The plowing of layes is the first plowing up of grass ground for corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Lay.† n. s. [lay, French. It is said originally to signify sorrow or complaint, and then to have been transferred to poems written to express sorrow. It is derived by the French from lessus, Latin, a funeral song; but it is found likewise in the Teutonick dialect: ley, leoð, Saxon; leey, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — "Les premieres chansons Françoises furent nommées des lais," says M. de la Ravaliere, Poes. du Roi de Nav. tom. i. p. 215. And so far I believe he is right. But I see no foundation for supposing with him, that the lay was "une sorte d'elegie," and that it was derived "du mot Latin lessus, qui signifie des plaintes;" or that it was "la chanson la plus majestueuse et la plus grave." It seems more probable that lai in French was anciently a generical term, answering to song in English. The passage which M. de la Ravaliere has quoted from Le Brut, "Molt sot de lais, molt sot de notes," is thus rendered by our Layamon: "Ne cuthe na mon swa muchel of song." The same word is used by Peirol d'Alvergna, MS. Crofts, fol. lxxxv. to denote the songs of birds, certainly not of the plaintive kind. For my own part I am inclined to believe, that liod, Icel. lied, Teuton. leoð, Sax. and lai, French, are all to be deduced from the same Gothick original. Tyrwhitt, Introd. Disc. to Chaucer's Canterb. Tales, § xxvi. Liuthon is, in old Gothick, to sing.] A song; a poem. It is scarcely used but in poetry.

To the maiden's sounding timbrels sung,
In well attuned notes, a joyous lay. Spenser, F. Q.

Soon he slumber'd, fearing not be harm'd,
The whiles with a loud lay, she thus him sweetly charm'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charming lays. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Nor then the solemn nightingale
Ceas'd warbling, but all night tun'd her soft lays.
Milton, P. L.

If Jove's will
Have link'd that amorous power to thy soft lay,
Now timely sing. Milton, Sonnet.

He reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lay,
Whom all his charms could not incline to stay. Waller.

On Ceres let him call, and Ceres praise,
With uncouth dances, and with country lays. Dryden, Virg.

Ev'n gods incline their ravish'd ears,
And tune their own harmonious spheres
To his immortal lays. Dennis.

Lay. adj. [laicus, Latin; λαϊκός.] Not clerical; regarding or belonging to the people as distinct from the clergy.

All this they had by law, and none repin'd,
The pref'rence was but due to Levi's kind:
But when some lay preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

Lay persons, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be chancellors, officials, &c. Ayliffe, Parergon.

It might well startle
Our lay unlearned faith. Rowe.

La'yer. n. s. [from lay.]

1. A stratum, or row; a bed; one body spread over another.

A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the fibres. Evelyn, Kalendar.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a flood in great quantity, will naturally be. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. A sprig of a plant.

Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by slitting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and, after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a hook or two; and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it. Miller.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week. Evelyn.

3. A hen that lays eggs.

The oldest are always reckoned the best sitters, and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer.

Lay-land.* n. s. Fallow ground which lies untilled. More properly ley-land, or lea-land. But see Lay. In the north, ley-lands are lands in a common field laid down, which under that circumstance are said to lie ley.

He shall have my broad lay-lands.
Sir Cauline, Percy's Rel. i. i. 4.

Land,
Lie lay, till I return. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

La'yman. n. s. [lay and man.]

1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.

Laymen will neither admonish one another themselves, nor suffer ministers to do it. Gov. of the Tongue.

Since a trust must be, she thought it best
To put it out of laymen's pow'r at least,
And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest. Dryden.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part value for his lands, his title as antient, and as legal, as that of a layman, who is seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains. Swift.

2. An image used by painters in contriving attitudes.

You are to have a layman almost as big as the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

La'ystall.† n. s. [from lay and ſtal, Sax. stabulum, a dunghill on which they lay what is swept out of stalls or stables. Skinner. By others from stale, urine. Sometimes written leastall, or leystall.] An heap of dung.

Scarce could he footing find in that foul way,
For many corses, like a great lay-stall,
Of murdered men, which therein strowed lay. Spenser, F. Q.

Near the common lay-stall of a city.
Drayton, Pref. to Polyolbion.
If he will live abroad with his companions,
In dung and leystals, it is worth a fear.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

LA'ZAR.† n. s. [from Lazarus in the Gospel. Very old in our language: "A lazar or a beggere." Chaucer, C. T. Prol. Lazare is also old in the French.] One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestilential diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay. Spenser, F. Q.

I'll be sworn, and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. Shakspeare.

I am weary with drawing the deformities of life, and lazars of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me. Dryden.

Life he labours to refine
Daily, nor of his little stock denies
Fit alms to lazars merciful and meek. Philips.

LA'ZAR-HOUSE.† } LA'ZARET. } LAZARE'TTO. } n. s. [lazaret, French, lazzaretto, Italian; from lazar.] A house for the reception of the diseased; an hospital.

A place
Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark,
A lazar-house it seem'd, where were laid
Numbers of all diseas'd. Milton, P. L.

My genius prompts me, that I was born under a planet, not to die in a lazaretto. Howell, Lett. i. vi. 60.

The same penalty attends persons escaping from the lazaret. Blackstone.

LA'ZARLIKE.* } LA'ZARLY. } adj. [from lazar.] Full of sores, leprous.

A most instant tetter bark'd about;
Most lazarlike, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Those five leprous and lazarly orders.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

LA'ZARWORT. n. s. [Laserpitium.] A plant.

To LAZE.* v. n. [See the etymology of LAZY.] To live idly; to be idle; to slug.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Up, and laze not:
Hadst thou my business, thou couldst ne'er sit so.
Middleton's Witch.

The hands and the feet mutinied against the belly: they knew no reason, why the one should be lazing, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour. L'Estrange.

The sot cried, Utinam hoc esset laborare, while he lay lazing and lolling upon his couch. South.

To LAZE.* v. a. To waste in laziness; to stupify by sloth.

He that takes liberty to laze himself, and dull his spirits for lack of use, shall find the more he sleeps, the more he shall be drowsy; till he become a very slave to his bed, and make sleep his master. Whately, Redempt. of Time, (1634,) p. 23.

LA'ZILY. adv. [from lazy.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

Watch him at play, when following his own inclinations; and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke.

The eastern nations view the rising fires,
Whilst night shades us, and lazily retires. Creech.

LA'ZINESS. n. s. [from lazy.] Idleness; sluggishness; listlessness; heaviness in action; tardiness.

That instance of fraud and laziness, the unjust steward, who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve. South.

My fortune you have rescued, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness. Dryden.

LA'ZULI. n. s.

The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white, and a glistering or metallick yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow talc; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this fumes off in the calcination of the stone, and casts a sulphureous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver.
Woodward.

LA'ZY.† adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from a l'aise, French; but it is however Teutonick; lijser in Danish, and losigh in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: "Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Nithardus, in tres ordines; Edhilingos, Frilingos, & Lazzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenuos & serviles: quam & nos distinctionem diu retinuimus. Sed Ricardo autem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; sic ut hodie apud Anglos rarior inveniatur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus antiquæ appellationis commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazie dicimus." Dr. Johnson. — Schilter notices also the Teut. lass, laz, slow, tardy. It may be observed, that our old word is laesie and lasie: "Thou's but a laesie loord." Spenser, Shep. Cal.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakspeare.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and spend victuals. Bacon.

Whose lazy waters without motion lay. Roscommon.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sleep. Dryden.

Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd in their own palace sleep. Pope.

Or lazy lakes unconscious of a flood,
Whose dull brown Naiads ever sleep in mud. Parnel.

What amazing stupidity is it, for men to be negligent of salvation themselves! to sit down lazy and unactive. Rogers.

2. Slow; tedious.

The ordinary method for recruiting their armies, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to resist this torrent. Clarendon.

LD. is a contraction of lord.

LEA.† n. s. [ley, Saxon, a fallow; leaȝ, Saxon, a pasture, a plain.] Ground enclosed, not open. Dr. Johnson. — Rather an extensive plain.

As when two warlike brigantines at sea,
With murd'rous weapons arm'd to cruell fight,
Doe meete together on the watry lea. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 16.

Greatly agast with his pittious plea;
Him rested the good man on the lea. Spenser.

Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, fetches, oats and peas. Shakspeare.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Dry up thy harrow'd veins, and plough torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man with lickerish draughts,
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind. Shakspeare.

He furrow'd many a churlish sea;
The viny Rhene, and Volgha's self did pass,
Who sleds doth suffer on his watery lea.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. ii. 13.

Such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise,
With the mincing Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton, Comus.

The lowing herd winds slowly over the lea. Gray.

LEACH.* See LEECH.

LEAD. n. s. [læð, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specifick gravity of lead is to that of water as 11322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriæ, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Of lead, some I can shew you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common ceruss with vinegar; of ceruss, red lead; of plumbum ustum, the best yellow ocher; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; because houses are covered with lead.

Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I would have the tower two stories, and goodly leads upon the top, raised with statues interposed. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the furnace. Ecclus. xxxviii. 30.

There is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass leaded with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. preter. I led; part. led. læðan, Saxon; leiden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

Doth not each on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? St. Luke, xiii. 15.

They thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill. St. Luke, iv. 29.

2. To conduct to any place.

Save to every man his wife and children, that they may lead them away, and depart. 1 Sam. xxx. 22.

Then brought he me out of the way, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate. Ezek. xlvii. 2.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. Psal. xxiii. 2.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight? Spenser on Ireland.

He turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads antient lords, and rev'rend bishops, on
To bloody battles. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He led me on to mightiest deeds,
Above the nerve of mortal arm,
Against the uncircumcis'd, our enemies:
But now hath cast me off. Milton, S. A.

Christ took not upon him flesh and blood, that he might conquer and rule nations, lead armies, or possess places. South.

He might muster his family up, and lead them out against the Indians, to seek reparation upon any injury. Locke.

4. To introduce by going first.

Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in. Numb. xxvii. 17.

His guide, as faithful from that day,
As Hesperus that leads the sun his way. Fairfax.

5. To guide; to shew the method of attaining.

Human testimony is not so proper to lead us into the knowledge of the essence of things, as to acquaint us with the existence of things. Watts, Logick.

6. To draw; to entice; to allure.

Appoint him a meeting, give him a shew of comfort, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakspeare.

The lord Cottington, being a master of temper, knew how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler, and then expose him. Clarendon.

7. To induce; to prevail on by pleasing motives.

What I did, I did in honour,
Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul. Shakspeare.

He was driven by the necessities of the times, more than led by his own disposition, to any rigour of actions. K. Charles.

What I say will have little influence on those whose ends lead them to wish the continuance of the war. Swift.

8. To pass; to spend in any certain manner.

The sweet woman leads an ill life with him. Shakspeare.

So shalt thou lead
Safest thy life, and best prepar'd endure
Thy mortal passage when it comes. Milton, P. L.

Him, fair Lavinia, thy surviving wife
Shall breed in groves, to lead a solitary life. Dryden.

Luther's life was led up to the doctrines he preached, and his death was the death of the righteous. Fr. Atterbury.

Celibacy, as then practised in the church of Rome, was commonly forced, taken up under a bold vow, and led in all uncleanness. Fr. Atterbury.

This distemper is most incident to such as lead a sedentary life. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To LEAD.† v. n.

1. To go first, and shew the way.

I will lead on softly, according as the cattle that goeth before me, and the children be able to endure. Gen. xxxiii.

2. To conduct as a commander.

3. To shew the way, by going first.

He left his mother a countess by patent, which was a new leading example, grown before somewhat rare. Wotton.

The way of maturing of tobacco must be from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this in musk-melons sown upon a hot-bed dunged below. Bacon.

The vessels heavy-laden put to sea
With prosp'rous gales, a woman leads the way. Dryden.

4. To exercise dominion.

For shepherds, said he, there doen lead
As lords done otherwhere. Spenser, July.

5. To LEAD off. To begin.

Her social powers were brilliant, but not uniform; for, on some occasions, she would persist in a determined taciturnity, to the regret of the company present; and, at other times, would lead off in her best manner, when perhaps none were present, who could taste the spirit and amenity of her humour. Cumberland, Memoirs of Himself.

LEAD.† n. s. [from the verb.] Guidance; first place: a low despicable word. Dr. Johnson.—Bolingbroke, however, somewhere uses it; and a most eminent writer in our own time farther warrants the usage of it.

Yorkshire takes the lead of the other counties. Herring.

At the time I speak of having a momentary lead, I am sure I did my country important service. Burke, Lett. p. 17.

LE'ADEN.† adj. [leaðen, Saxon.]

1. Made of lead.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Shakspeare, Coriol.

O murth'rous slumber!
Lay'st thou the leaden mace upon my boy,
That plays thee musick? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

A leaden bullet shot from one of these guns against a stone wall, the space of twenty-four paces from it, will be beaten into a thin plate. Wilkins, Mathem. Magick.

2. Heavy; unwilling; motionless.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

3. Heavy; dull.

I'll strive with troubled thoughts to take a nap;
Lest leaden slumber poize me down to morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakspeare.

4. Stupid; absurd.

What is so leaden or blockishe, which these doltish papists will not avouch for the maintenance of their trompery? Fulke, Retentive, &c. (1580,) p. 43.

LE'ADEN-HEARTED.* adj. [leaden and heart.] Having an unfeeling, stupid heart.

O leaden-hearted men, to be in love with death! Thomson, Castle of Indolence, C. 2.

LE'ADEN-HEELED.* adj. [leaden and heel.] Slow in progress.

Comforts are leaden-heeled. Ford, Love's Labyrinth, (1661,) p. 53.

LE'ADEN-STEPPING.* adj. [leaden and step.] Slowly moving.

Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours,
Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace. Milton.

LE'ADER. n. s. [from lead.]

1. One that leads, or conducts.

2. Captain; commander.

In my tent
I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakspeare.

I have given him for a leader and commander to the people. Isaiah, lv. 4.

Those escaped by flight, not without a sharp jest against their leaders, affirming, that, as they had followed them into the field, so it was good reason they should follow them out. Hayward.

When our Lycians see
Our brave examples, they admiring say,
Behold our gallant leaders. Denham.

The brave leader of the Lycian crew. Dryden.

3. One who goes first.

Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, now you are a leader Shakspeare.

4. One at the head of any party or faction: as, the detestable Wharton was the leader of the whigs.

The understandings of a senate are enslaved by three or four leaders, set to get or to keep employments. Swift.

LE'ADING. participial adj. Principal; chief; capital.

In organized bodies, which are propagated by seed, the shape is the leading quality, and most characteristical part that determines the species. Locke.

Mistakes arise from the influence of private persons upon great numbers stiled leading men and parties. Swift.

LE'ADING.* n. s. [from lead.]

1. Guidance; conduct by the hand.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep:
Bring me but to the very brim of it,
And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Conduct of a commander.

Lords have had the leading of their own followers to the general hostings. Spenser on Ireland.

If thou wilt have
The leading of thy own revenges, take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Cyrus was beaten and slain under the leading of a woman, whose wit and conduct made a great figure. Temple.

LEADING-STRINGS. n. s. [lead and string.] Strings by which children, when they learn to walk, are held from falling.

Sound may serve such, ere they to sense are grown,
Like leading-strings, till they can walk alone. Dryden.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or swim without bladders, without being discovered by his hobbling and his sinking? Swift.

LE'ADMAN. n. s. [lead and man.] One who begins or leads a dance.

Such a light and mettled dance
Saw you never,
And by leadmen for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-stones. B. Jonson.

LE'ADWORT. n. s. [lead and wort; plumbago.] A plant.

LE'ADY.* adj. [from lead.] Of the colour of lead. Huloet.

His ruddy lips [were] wan, and his eyes leady and hollow. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 124.

LEAF.† n. s. leaves, plural. [leaꝼ, Saxon; leaf, Dutch; lauf, Goth. "vox antiquiss. multisque linguis communis." Serenius.]

1. The green deciduous parts of plants and flowers.

This is the state of man; to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms. Shakspeare.

A man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which his incision is made, if his graft have blossom buds; whereas if it were only leaf buds, it will not bear fruit till the second season. Boyle.

Those things which are removed to a distant view, ought to make but one mass; as the leaves on the trees, and the billows in the sea. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A part of a book, containing two pages.

Happy ye leaves, when as those lilly hands
Shall handle you. Spenser.

Peruse my leaves through every part,
And think thou seest my owner's heart
Scrawl'd o'er with trifles. Swift.

3. One side of a double door.

The two leaves of the one door were folding. 1 Kings.

4. Any thing foliated, or thinly beaten.

Eleven ounces two pence sterling ought to be of so pure silver, as is called leaf silver, and then the melter must add of other weight seventeen pence halfpenny farthing. Camden.

Leaf gold, that flies in the air as light as down, is as truly gold as that in an ingot. Digby on Bodies.

To LEAF. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring leaves; to bear leaves.

Most trees fall off the leaves at autumn; and if not kept back by cold, would leaf about the solstice. Brown.

LE'AFAGE.* n. s. [from leaf.] Store of leaves.

If morn and ev'n fresh leafage they may have. The Silke-Wormes, (1599.)

LE'AFED.* adj. [from leaf.] Bearing or having leaves. Huloet.

LE'AFLESS. adj. [from leaf.] Naked of leaves.

Bare honesty without some other adornment, being looked on as a leafless tree, nobody will take himself to its shelter. Gov. of the Tongue.

Where doves in flocks, the leafless trees o'ershade,
And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade. Pope.

LE'AFY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves.

The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer was first leafy. Shakspeare.

What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?
— Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth. Milton, Comus.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontroul'd and boundless reign. Dryden.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden, Flo. and Leaf.
So when some swelt'ring travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool sunless verge
Of Paraba, Brasilian stream; her tail
A grisly hydra suddenly shoots forth. Philips.

LEAGUE. n. s. [ligue, French; ligo, Lat. to bind together.] A confederacy; a combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassage
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.
And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Shakspeare.
We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shakspeare.

Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me. 2 Chron. xvi. 3.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts or leagues: there are other bands of society and implicit confederations. Bacon, Holy War.

I, a private person, whom my country
As a league-breaker gave up bound, presum'd
Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton, S. A.
Oh, Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this hated race: and let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

To LEAGUE v. n. To unite on certain terms; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade society, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependances. South.

LEAGUE. n. s. [lieuë, Fr. leuca, Latin; from lech, Welsh, a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.] A measure of length, containing three miles.

Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encount'red by a mighty rock. Shakspeare.
Ev'n Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echo's answer'd. Addison.

LE'AGUED. adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs? Philips.

LE'AGUER.† n. s. [Dutch, or Flemish. "They will not vouchsafe in their speaches or writings to use our termes belonging to matters of warre, but doo call a campe by the Dutch name of legar; nor will not affoord to say that such a towne or such a fort is besieged, but that it is belegard." Sir J. Smythe, Certain Disc. 1590, fol. 2.]

1. Camp; not siege, as Dr. Johnson has hastily asserted.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our tents. Shakspeare, All's Well.

They played their cannon day and night into the enemy's leaguers and quarters.—They shot into the leaguer at Hedington hill, and there killed Lieutenant Colonel Cotsworth. A. Wood, Annals Univ. Ox. an. 1646.

2. One united in a confederacy. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The divisions are so many, and so intricate, of protestants and catholicks, royalists and leaguers. Bacon, Observ. on a Libel, (1592.)

Are you leaguers, or covenanters, or associators? Dryden, Vindic. of the Duke of Guise.

LEAK.† n. s. [lek, leke, Dutch; hlece, Sax. leaky; leka, Su. Goth. to flow or run.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no art of man can cure: breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop. Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship. Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

LEAK.* adj. [hlece, Sax. hlece ſcip, a leaky ship. Lye.] Leaky.

And fifty sisters water in leake vessels draw. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 55.

Yet is the bottle leake, and bag so torn,
That all which I put in fals out anon. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 24.

To LEAK. v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney. Shakspeare.

His feet should be washed every day in cold water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak, and let in water. Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discontinuity.

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several parts, may be emptied out again. Wilkins.

Golden stars hung o'er their heads,
And seem'd so crowded, that they burst upon 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence
In leaking fire. Dryden and Lee.

To LEAK.* v. a. To let out.

It would be next to impossible to make pipes to hold so perfectly as not to leak air in some parts. Mr. Hooke, in Hist. R. Soc. iv. 548.

LE'AKAGE.† n. s. [from leak.]

1. State of a vessel that leaks.

They weaken themselves by too great a leakage of their power. Bp. Parker, Repr. Reh. Transpr. p. 11.

2. Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LE'AKY. adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might. Dryden.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could not hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret. L'Estrange.

LEAM.* See LEME.

To LEAN.† v. n. preter. leaned or leant. [hlinian, Saxon; lenen, Dutch.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Security is expressed among the medals of Gordianus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a sceptre in her hand, before an altar. Peacham on Drawing.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto so good supporters. Wotton.

Upon his ivory sceptre first he leant,
Then shook his head, that shook the firmament. Dryden.

If God be angry, all our other dependencies will profit us nothing; every other support will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most. Rogers.

Then leaning o'er the rails he musing stood. Gay.
'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around
Leans the huge elephant. Thomson.

2. To propend; to tend towards.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust and more inconvenient. Spenser.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. Prov. iii. 5.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely. Watts.

3. To be in a bending posture.

She leans me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night. Shakspeare.

Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries. Dryden.

The gods came downward to behold the wars,
Sharp'ning their sights, and leaning from their stars. Dryden.

4. To bend; to waver; to totter.

What shalt thou expect,
To be depender on a thing that leans? Shakspeare, Cymb.

To LEAN.* v. a.

1. To incline; to cause to lean.

Lean thine aged back against mine arm,
And in that case I'll tell thee my disease. Shakspeare.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'erspent,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leant. Dryden.

2. [Icel leina.] To conceal. North of Eng. Ray, and Grose. "They will give a thing no leaning," i. e. they will not suffer the least connivance. Lyc.

LEAN.† adj. [hlæne, læne, Sax. læniʒ, slender.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; bareboned.

As lene was his horse as is a rake. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire. Shakspeare.

Lean raw-bon'd rascals, who would e'er suppose,
They had such courage and audacity! Shakspeare.

Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change. Shakspeare.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in a loathsome cave. Shakspeare.

Seven other kine came up out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed. Gen. xli. 3.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation. Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the Cynick tub,
Praising the lean, and sallow, abstinence. Milton, Comus.

Swear that Adrastus, and the lean-look'd prophet,
Are joint conspirators. Dryden and Lee.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the vessels. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

No laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
but haggard grief, lean-looking, sallow care,
Dwell on my brow. Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.

There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water. Burnet, Theory.

3. Low; poor: in opposition to great or rich.

That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

4. Jejune; not comprehensive; not embellished: as, a lean dissertation.

The case is quite different in our author's low and lean performance. Waterland, Script. Vindic. P. ii. p. 7.

5. Shallow; dull.

A lunatick lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an ague's privilege. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

LEAN. n. s. That part of flesh which consists of the muscle without the fat.

With razors keen we cut our passage clean
Through rills of fat, and deluges of lean. Farquhar.

LE'ANLY.† adv. [from lean.] Meagrely; without plumpness. Sherwood.

LE'ANNESS. n. s. [from lean.]

1. Extenuation of body; want of flesh; meagreness.

If thy leanness loves such food,
There are those, that, for thy sake,
Do enough. B. Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid dejectures, leanness, and weakness. Arbuthnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.

The poor king Reignier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Shakspeare.

LE'ANY.* adj. [leen-man, Teut. a servant.] Alert; active. Grose notices this word, but does not mention in what place it is used.

Fat kernes, and leany knaves. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

To LEAP.† v. n. hlæpan, Sax. hlaupan, Goth. to dance; hleypa, Icel. to run; loup, Scottish, to jump.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force, for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In a narrow pit,
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowley, David.

Thrice from the ground she leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance. Dryden, Æn.

2. To rush with vehemence.

God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a fear leaped from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again. Esth. xv. 8.

After he went into the tent, and found her not, he leaped out to the people. Judith, xiv. 7.

He ruin upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Sandys.

Strait leaping from his horse he rais'd me up. Rowe.

3. To bound; to spring.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. St. Luke, vi. 23.

I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. To fly; to start.

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job, xli. 19.

To LEAP. v. a.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.

Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden, Span. Friar.

She dares pursue, if they dare lead:
As their example still prevails:
She tempts the stream or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.

Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden, Georg.

LEAP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.

After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded? L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.

Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of chusing a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.

The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.

How she cheats her bellowing lovers' eyes;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden, Æn.

6. Hazard or effect of leaping.

Methinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon. Shakspeare.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where yon old fisher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryden, Theocritus.

LEAP.* n. s. [læp, Saxon; ꞅæð-læp, a basket to carry corn in while sowing.]

1. A basket.

Neither of seven looves into four thousynd of men, and how many leepis, ye token? Wicliffe, St. Matt. xvi. 9.

2. A weel for fish. Sherwood.

LEAP-FROG. n. s. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

LEAP-YEAR. n. s.

Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:

Divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past, 1, 2, 3. Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the year consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown.

LE'APER.* n. s. [from leap; Sax. hleapeꞃe, a dancer.]

1. One who leaps or capers.
2. Spoken of a horse, which passes over hedge and ditch by leaping.

LE'APINGLY.* adv. [from the part. leaping.] By leaps. Huloet.

LEAR.* See LERE.

To LEARN.† v. a. [leoꞃnian, Saxon; leren, Germ. to learn and to teach; læꞃan, Sax. to teach; læꞃe, learning, skill. See LERE.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.

Learn a parable of the fig-tree. St. Matt. xxiv. 32.

He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.

Learn, wretches, learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind. Dryden, Pers.

You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition,
All he can learn of me will be to weep! A. Philips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.] This sense is now perhaps obsolete. It is retained in the present version of the Psalms in our Common Prayer Book.

He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser, F. Q.

You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know not how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakspeare, Tempest.

A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shakspeare.

Hast thou not learn'd me how
To make perfumes? Shakspeare, Cymb.

My testimonies that I shall learn them. Ps. cxxxii. 13.

To LEARN. v. n. To take pattern; with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly. St. Matt. xi. 29.

In imitation of sounds, that man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LE'ARNED.† adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Skilled: skilful; knowing: with in.

Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,
Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts. Granville.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

4. Wise.

Those needful jealousies of state, that warn wiser princes hourly to provide for their safety; and to teach them how learned a thing it is to beware of the humblest enemy. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

LE'ARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad. Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakspeare.

Ev'ry coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LE'ARNER.† n. s. [from learn. Sax. leoꞃneꞃe.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

LE'ARNING.† n. s. [from learn. Sax. leoꞃnunᵹ. Rarely used in the plural number.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid; and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.

The king, he takes the babe
To his protection; calls him Posthumus; —
Puts him to all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.

As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.

An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long sithence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LE'ASABLE.* adj. [from lease.] Capable of being let by lease. Sherwood.

LEASE.† n. s. [laisser, French; Spelman: lassen, Germ. Serenius.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, cousin, wer't thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shakspeare.
Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Denham.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspeare.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'ned hast thy own life's lease.
Milton, El. M. of Winchester.

To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.
Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliffe, Parergon.

To LEASE.† v. n. [lesen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon leſan, and liſan, to gather, to collect; lisan, Goth. and lesa, Icel. the same. This word, therefore, might justly be distinguished, in its spelling, from the former lease, and the subsequent leasing, by being written lese.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.
She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.

LE'ASER.† n. s. [from lease.]

1. Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.
There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.

2. A liar. See LEASING.
Those idle words — we answer with silence and scorn. Let leesers have leave to talk. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cler. p. 339.

LE'ASEHOLD.* adj. [lease and hold.] Holden by lease; as, a leasehold tenement.

LEASH.† n. s. [lesse, French; letse, Teut. lascia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Germ. lasche, a bit of leather, a flap. Serenius.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk; or a courser leads his greyhound. Hanmer.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspeare.
What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2 A tierce; three.
I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their christian names. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.
Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis, Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.
The ravished soul being shewn such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.

To LEASH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leasht in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
Cerberus, from below,
Must, leash'd to himself, with him a hunting go.
Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 33.

LE'ASING.† n. s. [leaſunge, Saxon; leysing, Icel. perfidy. Wicliffe calls liars "leasing-mongers," dealers in lying.] Lies; falsehood.
O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing. Psal. iv. 2.
He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell.
Spenser, Hub. Tale.
He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Spenser, Hub. Tale.
That false pilgrim which that leasing told,
Being indeed old Archimage. Spenser, F. Q.
I have ever verified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbl'd past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stampt the leasing. Shakspeare, Coriol.
As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie deserted:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lewd affright the swain. Gay, Pastorals.

LE'ASOW.* n. s. [leſpe, læſpe, Saxon.] A pasture. This word is very old in our language; but has escaped notice, notwithstanding the modern application of it by Shenstone to his celebrated residence, the Leasowes. Kelham notices also the Norm. Fr. leswes, or lesues, as used for pasture-ground.
He schal go yn, and schal go out; and he schal fynde lesewis, [in the present version, pasture.]
Wicliffe, St. John, x. 9.

LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [læſt, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write lest, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others; smallest.
I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Gen. xxxii. 10.
A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.
He resolv'd to wave his suit,
Or for a while play least in sight. Hudibras.
Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
But taste it as the least unhappy lot. Dryden, Kn. Tale.
No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it. Pope, Letters.

At LEAST.
At the LEAST.
At LEASTWISE.

1. To say no more; not to demand or affirm more than is barely sufficient; at the lowest degree.
He who attempts, though in vain, at least asperses
The tempted with dishonour. Milton, P. L.
He from my side subducting, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bestowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show
Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton, P. L.
Upon the mast they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat as on horseback. Sidney.
Every effect doth after a sort contain, at leastwise resemble the cause for which it proceedeth. Hooker.
Honour and fame at least the thund'rer ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a God. Pope.
The remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.
A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the omniscient Being.
Dryden, Ded. to Juvenal.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created. Milton, P. L.

Let useful observations be at least some part of the subject of your conversation. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

LE'ASY. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left loose and leasy. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

LEAT.* n. s. [læt, Sax. third pers. sing. pret. from lædan, to lead, to conduct.] A trench to convey water to or from a mill. Mentioned in the Stat. 7 Jac. I. c. 19.

LE'ATHER. n. s. [leðeр, Saxon; leaâr, Erse.]

1. Dressed hides of animals.

He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. 2 Kings, i. 8.

And if two boots keep out the weather,
What need you have two hides of leather? Prior.

2. Skin; ironically.

Returning sound in limb and wind,
Except some leather lost behind. Swift.

3. It is often used in composition for leathern.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle;
Is far beyond a prince's delicates. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

To LE'ATHER.* v. a. To beat; to lash as with a thong of leather. A low expression: used also in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Dict. "I'll leather you heartily." North of England. Grose.

To LE'ATHER, or LE'THER.* v. n. [hleoðpian, Sax. to thunder, to make a great noise; spoken of running horses, Ray says; as, they lether it away; which, in some places, is, they thunder it along.] To proceed with noise or violence; to push forward eagerly. A common but low expression.

LE'ATHERCOAT. n. s. [leather and coat.] An apple with a tough rind.

There is a dish of leathercoats for you. Shakspeare.

LE'ATHERDRESSER. n. s. [leather and dresser.] He who prepares leather; he who manufactures hides for use.

He removed to Cumæ; and by the way was entertained at the house of one Tychius, a leather-dresser. Pope.

LE'ATHER-JACKET.* n. s. A fish of the Pacifick Ocean.

Some beautifully spotted soles, leather-jackets, &c. Cook and King's Voyage.

LE'ATHER-MOUTHED. adj. [leather and mouth.]

By a leather-mouthed fish, I mean such as have their teeth in their throat; as the chub or cheven. Walton, Angler.

LE'ATHERN.† adj. [from leather. Sax. leðeрn.] Made of leather.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand,
A free-stone colour'd hand: I verily did think
That her old gloves were on. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins. St. Matt. iii. 4.

In silken or in leathern purse retain
A splendid shilling. Philips.

LE'ATHERSELLER. n. s. [leather and seller.] He who deals in leather, and vends it.

LE'ATHER-WINGED.* adj. [leather and wing.] Having wings like leather.

The lether-winged batt, dayes enemy. Spenser, F. Q.

LE'ATHERY. adj. [from leather.] Resembling leather.

Wormius calls this crust a leathery skin. Grew, Museum.

LEAVE. n. s. [leaꝼe, Saxon; from lyꝼan, to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.

By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful foresight, methinks I see an evil lurk unespied. Spenser on Ireland.

When him his dearest Una did behold,
Disdaining life, desiring leave to dye. Spenser, F. Q.

I make bold to press upon you.
— You're welcome; give us leave, drawer. Shakspeare.

The days
Of Sylla's sway, when the free sword took leave
To act all that it would. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Thrice happy snake! that in her sleeve
May boldly creep, we dare not give
Our thoughts so unconfin'd a leave. Waller.

No friend has leave to bear away the dead. Dryden.

Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to shew. Dryden.

One thing more I crave leave to offer about syllogism, before I leave it. Locke.

I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party: nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of asking this leave. Pope.

2. Farewell; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith. Shakspeare.

Evils that take leave,
On their departure, most of all shew evil. Shakspeare.

There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Here my father comes;
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But my dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Suckling.

Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations. Brown.

To LEAVE.† v. a. pret. I left; I have left. [Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon læꝼan, leoꝼan, to leave, to relinquish; leifa, Icel. the same.]

1. To quit; to forsake.

A man shall leave his father and his mother, and cleave to his wife. Gen. ii. 24.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine. B. Jonson.

2. To desert; to abandon.

He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him. Ecclus. xxix. 17.

3. To depart from, without action; as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great diseases. 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

4. To have remaining at death.

There be of them that have left a name behind them. Ecclus. xliv. 8.

5. Not to deprive of.

They still have left me the providence of God, and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too. Bp. Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind comprehendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed. Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves out of the reach of any one to discover from his writings. Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel. Judg. vi. 4.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattle; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil. Deut. xxviii. 48.

Vastius gave strict commandment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage. Knolles, Hist.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life,
I am superiour, I can take or leave. Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my reader, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, Oh happy shade, be ever thine. Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign; to part with.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

Such black and grained spots,
As will not leave their tinct. Shakspeqre, Hamlet.

If a wise man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.

14. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.

In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting. Addison, Spect.

15. To LEAVE off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets: he put on a serious air. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

16. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

You may partake: I have told 'em who you are.
— I should be loth to be left out, and here too. B. Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.

Befriend till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep. Milton, Comus.

We ask, if those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive,
Though we one atom out of matter leave? Blackmore.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgement, by Tucca and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison on Italy.

To LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakspeare.

And since this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shakspeare.

He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genesis.

2. To LEAVE off. To desist.

Grittus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed. Knolles, Hist.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait. Roscommon.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.

To LEAVE. v. a. [from levy; lever, French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhime.

An army strong she leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd. Spenser, F. Q.

LE'AVED.✝ adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

These tamarisks with thick-leav'd box are found,
And cytisus and garden-pines abound. Congreve, Transl. of Ovid.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xlv. 1.

LE'AVELESS.* adj. [from leaf and less.] Having no leaves. Leafless is more used.

Then I no more shall court the verdant bay,
But the dry leaveless trunk on Golgotha.
Carew, Verses pref. to Sandys's Psalms.

LE'AVEN.✝ n. s. [levain, Fr. from lever, to lift up; levare, Lat. Our word should be written leven. "The sour coagulated milk of Syria is called leven." Withering's Eng. Botany, ii. 324.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of sour dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baken with leaven. Lev. vi. 17.

All fermented meats and drinks are easiest digested; and those unfermented, by barm or leaven, are hardly digested. Floyer.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass: it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions savour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

To LE'AVEN.✝ v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

Whosoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.

2. To taint; to imbue.

They yet so watch over their hearts, as not to suffer any outward momentary adornings whatsoever to leaven them with any thing of pride or sinful vanity.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 187.

That cruel something unpossest,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

3. To imbue: in a good sense.

A few fishermen leavened the world with a doctrine quite against the grain of it; and naked truth prevailed against authority, art, and interest, in conjunction.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

LE'AVENING.* n. s. [from leaven.] Ferment mixed with any substance to make it light.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon.

LE'AVENOUS.* adj. [from leaven.] Containing leaven; tainted.

Whose unsincere and leavenous doctrine, corrupting the people, first taught them looseness, then bondage.
Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 9.

LE'AVER. n. s. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive. Shakspeare.

LEAVES. n. s. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LE'AVINESS.* n. s. [from leavy.] State of being full of leaves; accumulation of leaves. Leafiness would be better. Sherwood.

Le'avings. n. s. [from leave.] Remnant; relicks; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharsalia. Addison, Cato.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Cloe's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed? Swift.

Le'avy. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves; leafy is more used.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitsontide to bear. Sidney.

Now, near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To Lech.† v. a. [lecher, French. This is merely another term for the verb latch, already noticed; which Hanmer explains by letch. But this is the commentary, made, in an unguarded moment, by the rash pen of Mr. Mason: "Hast thou yet lech'd the Athenian's eyes, &c." See To Latch. "This," Mr. Mason says, "is a strong specimen of Johnson's inconsistency. Under the verb latch, this passage is given for an example of it, the word being silently altered to latched. Such willful impositions on the public would be enough to ruin any literary character whatsoever."—Now silent alteration is quite out of the question; latch is the reading of the poet, retained by Mr. Steevens; and is one of our northern words unknown to Mr. Mason. Johnson gives lech, or, as Hanmer reads it, letch, merely, perhaps, as the proposed alteration of that critick; and accordingly so cited the passage.

LE'CHER.† n. s. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French: luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense. Dr. Johnson. — The old French language has lecheur, "galant, libertin, débauché, friand, gourmand, qui s' adonne aux plaisirs, soit de la table ou de l'amour." Roquefort. — Leȝeppeipe, Saxon, is "concubitus illicitus, fornicatio, adulterium. Hinc nostra, lecher, lecherous, lechery." Lye, edit. Manning. — It is probably from the German laichen, to be lascivious, to play the whore.] A whore-master.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house; he cannot 'scape me. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakspeare.

The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In Io's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his churning chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope, Odyssey.

To Le'cher. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? no.
The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly
Does lecher in my sight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Gut eats all day, and letchers all the night. B. Jonson.

Le'cherous.† adj. [from lecher.]

1. Provoking lust.

A lecherous thing is wine, and dronkenesse
Is ful of striving and of wretchednesse. Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

2. Lewd; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

Le'cherously.† adv. [from lecherous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

Ther he wastid his goodis, in lyvynge lecherously. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xv. 13.

Le'cherousness. n. s. [from lecherous.] Lewdness.

Le'chery.† n. s. [from lecher; old Fr. lecherie. See Lecher.] Lewdness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakspeare.

LE'CTION.† n. s. [lectio, Lat.]

1. A reading; a variety in copies.

I have perused those various lections. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 27.

Every critick has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentick. Watts, Logick.

2. A lesson, or portion of scripture, read in divine service.

To this last described Jewish order of morning prayers so far did the ancient Christian agree, as to begin likewise with lections and psalmody. Hooper on Lent, p. 355.

Le'ctionary.* n. s. [low Lat, lectionarium.] A book containing parts of scripture, which were read in churches.

The lectionary contained all the lessons, whether from scripture, or other books, which were directed to be read in the course of the year. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 337.

Mabillon found at Lisieux, and published, a Gallic lectionary, which is reputed to be now about 1200 years old, and contains the entire epistle of John, except the three heavenly witnesses. Porson, Lett. to Travis, p. 153.

LE'CTURE. n. s. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney.

Wrangling pedant,
When in musick we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shakspeare.

When letters from Cæsar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there. Locke.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantick discourse.

Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison.

To Le'cture. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.
2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.

To Le'cture. v. n. To read in publick; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse; as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

Le'cturer. n. s. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.
2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

Le'ctureship. n. s. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.

Le'cturn.* n. s. [lectrin, old Fr. lectrinum, low Lat. from lectus of lego, to read.] A reading desk. Obsolete. Huloet.

The second lesson Robin Redebreste sang—
And to the lectorne amorily he sprang. Chaucer, Court of Love.

Led. part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezek. xxxix. 28.

The leaders of this people caused them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Isa. ix. 16.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

Le'dden.* n. s. [lyden, Sax. the Latin language, and language in general; læden, the Latin only. Dante, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, uses latino in the general sense of lyden. Our old word is sometimes lede, or leid, for language; which, as well as ledden, are now obsolete.]

1. Language.

She understood wel every thing
That any foule may in his leden sain,
And coude answere him in his leden again. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

Thereto he was expert in prophecies
And could the ledden of the gods unfold. Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 19.

Her ledden was like human language true. Fairfax, Tasso, xvi. 13.

2. True meaning.

And those that do to Cynthia expound
The ledden of strange languages in charge. Spenser, Colin Clout.

Ledca'ptain.* n. s. [led and captain.] An humble attendant; a favourite that follows as if led by a string.

Mr. Pope, and Mr. Gay, were then favourites of Mrs. Howard; especially Gay, who was then of her ledcaptains. Swift to Lady B. Germaine, (1732.)

They will never want some creditable ledcaptain to attend them, at a minute's warning, to operas, plays, Ranelagh, and Vauxhall. Ld. Chesterfield.

LEDGE.† n. s. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Wotton on Architecture.

2. A ridge rising above the rest; or projecting beyond the rest.

We are like some fond spectators, that when they see the puppets acting upon the ledge, think they move alone; not knowing that there is an hand behind their curtain that stirs all their wires. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 77.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

3. Any prominence or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides,
The bending brow above, a safe retreat provides. Dryden.

Le'dger.* n. s. In the sense of an account-book, this orthography is settled by long custom. In any other sense it is perfectly obsolete, so that no advantage can arise from altering the spelling. As a further confirmation of ledger, we have ledge derived from the same Dutch word which is the original of ledger, namely, leggen, to lie. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 297. See Leger.

Ledho'rse n. s. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

Lee.† n. s. [lie, French.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse: commonly lees.

My cloaths, my sex, exchang'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.

2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from l'eau, French, the water, Dr. Johnson. — We have here a vestige of the old Iceland. word lae, laa, the sea. This seems to give us the true origin of the English lee, which has been strangely derived by Skinner from l'eau. Others have traced it to le, as denoting shelter: [lee, Goth. "locus tempestatibus subductus." Ihre.] But a lee shore is that, towards which the winds blow, and, of consequence, the waves are driven. From the lee side of the ship being understood to denote that which is not directly exposed to the wind, it seems to have been oddly inferred, that the term lee, as thus used, signifies calm, tranquil. Dr. Jamieson, in V. Le.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as she might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way. Dict.

If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Ralegh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north west, making a lee shore in all weathers. Ralegh.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. King Charles.

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton, P. L.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvas play. Dryden.

To Lee. v. n. [leogan, Sax.] To utter a falsehood; to lie. Chaucer uses lee for a lie. "Thou lees" is thou tellest a lie, in our northern dialect.]

LEECH.† n. s. [læc, Saxon; lek, lekeis. Gothick. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer use this word.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cowleech.

A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of grieved conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser, F. Q.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach. Spenser, F. Q.

Physick is their bane.
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis. Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health-restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Rowe.

A skilful leach
They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leach Arbuthnot was yclept. Gay, Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wiseman.

Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably. Roscommon.

To LEECH.✝ v. a. [læcnian, Sax. leikinon, Gothick.] To treat with medicament; to heal.

Fully avised him to leche. Chaucer's Dream, ver. 852.

LE'ECHCRAFT. n. s. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it. Davies.

LEECH-WAY.* n. s. [from the Gothick leik, flesh, and also a corpse.] The path in which the dead are carried to be buried. Exmore Dialect. That is, the way of all flesh.

LEEF.✝ adj. [leoꝼ, Saxon, dear, loved; lieve, leve, Dutch, the same.]

1. Agreeable; pleasing; grateful; dear.

Mine own dere brother, and my lefist lord. Chaucer, Merch. Tale.

Whilome all these were low and liefe,
And loved their flocks to feed;
They never stroven to be chiefe,
And simple was their weede. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
My little flock that was to me most lief. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
For love of that is to thee most leef. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Willing: as, "leef or loth;" common in Gower.

All were they liefe or loth. Spenser, F. Q.

LEEF.* adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; willingly; readily. "I would as leef not go." Common, as a vulgar expression, in many parts of England. See also LEVER.

LEEK. n. s. [leac, Saxon; loock, Dutch; leechk, Erse, porrum, Latin.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fluellen? — Yes.
— Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate,
Upon St. David's day. Shakspeare.
Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Gay.

We use acrid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlick, or leek pottage. Floyer on Humours.

LEER.✝ n. s. [hleaꞃe, Sax. frons, facies, gena.]

1. Complexion; hue; face.

He hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you. Shakspeare, As you like it.

2. An oblique view.

I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Aside the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign

3. A labour'd cast of countenance.

Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer. Pope.
I place a statesman full before my sight;
A bloated monster in all his geer,
With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

4. Formerly, the cheek; agreeably to the Saxon usage of it.

No, ladie, quoth the earle with a lowde voyce, and the teares trilling down his leeres, say not so. Holingshed, Hist. of Irel. fol. 114. b.

LEER.* adj. [ᵹelæꞃ, Sax. vacuus.]

1. Empty. This expression, in colloquial language, is yet spoken, in some places, of the stomach: a leer stomach. In Wiltshire, a leer waggon is an empty waggon: in the Exmore dialect, the word is leery.

2. Empty; frivolous; foolish; without understanding.

The author doth promise a strutting horse-courser, with a leer drunkard, two or three to attend him in as good equipage as you would wish. B. Jonson, Induct. Barth. Fair.

Laugh on, Sir; I'll to bed and sleep,
And dream away the vapour of love, if th' house
And your leer drunkards let me. B. Jonson, New Inn.

He had rather have words bear two senses impertinently, than one to the purpose; and never speaks without a lere sense. Butler, Charact. Rem.

To LEER.✝ v. n. [from the noun; so leer, Dan. to smile; loeren, Dutch, to look askance.] To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

O yes! O yes! if any maid
Whom leering Cupid has betray'd
To frowns of spite, to eyes of scorn,
And would in madness now see torn
The boy in pieces; let her come
Hither, and lay on him her doom. Lily's Galathea.

I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

To LEER.* v. a. To draw on with smiles; to beguile with leering.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryden.

LE'ERINGLY.* adv. [from the part. leering.] With a kind of arch smile, or sneer.

He leeringly produces a passage, wherein I maintain that the convocations were heretofore frequently inhibited. Bp. Nicholson to Dr. Kennet, Ep. Corr. i. 236.

LEES. n. s. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular. But see LEE.

The memory of king Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon, Hen. VII.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine. B. Jonson.
Those lees that trouble it, refine
The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEESE.✝ v. a. [leoꞅan, Sax. to lose; lesen, Dutch.]

1. To lose: an old word.

Then sell to thy profit both butter and cheese,
Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese. Tusser.

Peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we leese not all the beasts. 1 Kings, xviii. 5.

No cause nor client fat, will Chev'ril leese,
But as they come on both sides he takes fees;
And pleaseth both: for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. B. Jonson.
How in the port our fleet dear time did leese,
Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees. Donne.

2. To hurt; to destroy. [læsus, Lat. from lædo, to hurt.]

A nyght theef cometh not, but that he stele, sle, and leese. Wicliffe, St. John, x. 10.

LEET.✝ n. s.

Leete, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon leðe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirshing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowel. [The word is probably from the Goth. and Icel. leita, to enquire.]

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit
With meditations lawful? Shakspeare, Othello.
You would present her at the leet,
Because she brought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

LEET-ALE.* n. s. A feast or merry-making at the time of the leet.

Leet-ale, in some parts of England, signifies the dinner at a court-leet of a manor for the jury and customary tenants. Warton, Hist. E.P. iii. 329

LE'EWARD.✝ adj. [lee and ƿeaꞃꝺ, Saxon.] Under the wind; on the side opposite to that from which the wind blows. See LEE.

The classicæ were called long ships, the onerariæ round because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind. Arbuthnot.

Let no statesman dare,
A kingdom to a ship compare;
Lest he should call our commonweal
A vessel with a double keel;
Which just like ours, new rigg'd and mann'd,
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward side,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEFE.* See LEEF, and LEVER.

LEFT. participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakspeare.

Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Addison, Spect.

LEFT. adj. [lufte, Dutch; lævus, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.

That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do ofttimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak:
That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.

The man who struggles in the fight,
Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

LEFT-HANDED.† adj. [left and hand.]

1. Using the left-hand rather than right.

The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left-hand most. Bacon.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Unlucky; inauspicious; unseasonable. [A latinism.]

That would not be put off with left-handed cries. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

They are close hypocrites, and walk in a left-handed policy. Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whitgift, p. 58.

Be ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne, Poems, p. 153.

LEFT-HANDINESS.* n. s. [from left hand.] Awkward manner.

An awkward address, ungraceful attitudes, and actions, and a certain left-handiness (if I may use the expression) proclaim low education. Ld. Chesterfield.

LEG.† n. s. [leg, Danish; leggur, Icelandick.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haste; and what their tardy feet denied,
The trusty staff, their better leg, supplied. Dryden.

Purging comfits, and ants' eggs,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison, Guardian.

2. An act of obeisance; a bow with the leg drawn back: usually, but not always, with the verb to make. Hence, in our old dictionaries, "to make a leg;" and all the examples, given by Dr. Johnson under the present meaning, are accompanied with this verb. There are now examples without it.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shakspeare, All's well.

Their horses never give a blow,
But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras.

He was a quarter of an hour in his legs, and reverences, to the company. L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo.

Nor enjoin them a leg, a cringe, or a bow. Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehearsal Transp. p. 508.

If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Swift.

3. To stand on his own LEGS. To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Collier of Friendship.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LE'GACY. n. s. [legatum, Latin.]

Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Cowel.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange.

When he thought you gone
To augment the number of the bless'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd, his brothers' portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LEGACY-HUNTER.* n. s. A word of contempt for persons, who by flattery or presents endeavour to obtain the good opinion of others, in order to be remembered in their wills by a legacy.

The legacy-hunters, the hæredipetæ, were a more common character among the ancients than with us. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

I am, Mr. Rambler, a legacy-hunter; and, as every man is willing to think well of the tribe in which his name is registered, you will forgive my vanity, if I remind you that the legacy-hunter, however degraded by an ill-compounded appellation in our barbarous language, was known, as I am told, in antient Rome, by the sonorous titles of "captator" and "hæredipeta!" Johnson, Rambler, No. 197.

LE'GAL.† adj. [legal, French; leges, Latin.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.

Whatsoever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is since is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale, Hist. of the Comm. Law.

2. Lawful; not contrary to law.

Assigning to every thing capable of ownership a legal and determinate owner. Blackstone.

3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits
To save them, no their own, though legal, works. Milton, P. L.

Lega'lity. n. s. [legalité, French.] Lawfulness.

To Le'galize.† v. a. legaliser, French; from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.

If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of Heaven, that no consideration can impower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South.

A market-overt for legalizing a base traffick of votes and pensions. Burke, Lett. to T. Burgh, Esq.

Le'gally. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Bp. Taylor.

Le'gatary. n. s. [legataire, French; from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary. Ayliffe.

LE'GATE. n. s. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassadour.

The legates from the Ætolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost,
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden, Æn.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassadour from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heaven. Shakspeare.

Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him. Atterbury.

Legate'e. n s. [from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden, Juv.

My will is, that if any of the above-named legatees should die before me, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself. Swift.

Le'gateship.* n. s. [from legate.] Office of a legate. Sherwood.

He put them in a box called "the box of the ambassage and legateship." Notstock, Confutation of the Alcoran, (1652,) p. 27.

Le'gatine.† adj. [from legate. Some write this word, improperly, legantine. Even Milton has so used it: "a kind of legantine power." Animadv. on the Rem. Defence. "Matters of embassies, and legantine affairs." Howell, Pref. to Finet's Philoxenis.]

1. Made by a legate.

When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a premunire. Shakspeare.

Lega'tion. n. s. [legatio, Latin.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

In attiring, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion costly, as in his legations. Wotton.

Lega'tor. n. s. [from lego, Latin.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debate
Betwixt pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent.
Dryden, Hind and Panther.

To Lege. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To allege; to assert.

To reson faste, and ledge auctoritie.
Chaucer, Court of Love, v. 1065.

Not only he legeth his mercy to bind his reason, but also his wysdome. Bp. Fisher, Ps. 15.

2. To lighten; to ease. [alleger, Fr.] Written also alege, or allege. In both senses obsolete.

To leggin her of her doloure. Chaucer, Rom. R. 5016.

LE'GEND. n. s. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which bred them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison on Italy.

2. Any memorial or relation.

And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentick narrative.

Who can shew the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd? Blackmore.

It is the way of attaining to heaven, that makes profane scorners so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Medals.

To Le'gend. v. a. [from the noun.] To detail as in a legend.

Nor ladie's wanton love nor wandering knight,
Legend I out in rhimes all richly dight. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 1.

Le'gendary.* adj. [from legend.] Fabulous; romantick; partaking of the nature of a legend.

Those legendary writers — ascribe it to them that brought the reliques of St. Andrew.
Bp. Lloyd, Hist. Ch. Gov. in Brit. (1684,) p. 29.

Much more creditable authors than a thousand of their legendary writers. Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 260.

Legendary stories of nurses and old women.
Bourne, Antiq. of the Comm. People, p. 41.

Le'gendary.* n. s.

1. A book of old histories. Cockeram.

2. A relater of legends.

Mendacious and counterfeit miracles related by the legendaries of their church.
Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 245.

Going with his nurse's sons into the field to fetch home the cows, saith his famous legendary, Abunazar, the angel Gabriel came unto him. L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 18.

The legendaries own, that St. Catharine was slandered as a fond and light woman.
Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Meth. and Papists, i. 59.

Le'ger. n. s. [from legger, Dutch, to lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassadour; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book; a book that lies in the compting-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassadour,
Where you shall be an everlasting leiger. Shakspeare.

I've given him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leigers for her sweet. Shakspeare, Cymb.

If legier ambassadours or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant. Bacon.

Who can endear
Thy praise too much? thou art Heaven's leiger here,
Working against the states of death and hell. Herbert.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leiger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon.

I call that a ledger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.

LEGER-BOOK.* n. s. A book that lies ready for entering articles of account or other memoranda in. See LEDGER.

Many leiger-books of the monasteries [are] still remaining, wherein they registered all their leases, and that for their own private use. H. Wharton on Burnet's Hist. of the Ref. p. 42.

An entry in the leger-book of the chapter. Blackstone.

LEGERDEMA'IN.† n. s. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, French. Dr. Johnson.—It was, of old, leger, legier du maine, or de maine: as, in Huloet's dictionary; in The Pope Confuted, fol. 35. 1580: "A trimme and skilfull shift of leiger de mayne;" and in Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 348: "Conveyed unto another by leger du main."] Sleight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.

He so light was at legierdemaine,
That what he touch'd came not to light again.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Of all the tricks and legerdemain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South.

LEGE'RITY. n. s. [legereté, French.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. A word not now in use.

When the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To LEGGE.* v. a. leczan, Sax.] To lay. See To LAY.

Not eftsoone legginge the foundaments of penaunce fro deede workis, [present version, not laying again the foundation, &c.] Wicliffe, Heb. vi. 1.

Ther durste no wight hond upon him legge.
Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

LE'GGED.† adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs: as, baker-legged, bandy-legged.

And all to leave what with his toil he won
To that unfeather'd two-legg'd thing, a son. Dryden.

LEGIBI'LITY.* n. s. [from legible.] Capability of being read.

LE'GIBLE. n. s. [legibilis, Latin.]

1. Such as may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.

2. Apparent; discoverable.

People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion; it stamps value and significancy upon his face. Collier.

LE'GIBLENESS.* n. s. [from legible.] State or quality of being legible. Ash.

LE'GIBLY. adv. [from legible.] In such a manner as may be read.

LE'GION. n. s. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is, the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shakspeare.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LE'GIONARY.† adj. [from legion; Fr. legionnaire.]

1. Relating to a legion. Sherwood.

It [the Gospel] was most probably first introduced among the legionary soldiers; for we find St. Alban, the first British martyr, to have been of that body. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. History.

2. Containing a legion.

3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many, applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of errour. Brown.

LE'GIONARY.* n. s. One of a body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The legionaries, stood thick in order, empaled with light-armed; the horse on either wing. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

To LE'GISLATE.* v. n. To make laws for any community.

Solon, in legislating for the Athenians, had an idea of a more perfect constitution than he gave them; but he gave them such laws as they were then capable of receiving.
Bp. Watson, Charge in 1805.

LEGISLA'TION.† n. s. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.

Let me intreat you to explain what you mean by this way of divine legislation, or this way of delivering the Will of God, by the writings of the Holy Scripture.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed.
Littleton on the Conversion of St. Paul.

LE'GISLATIVE. adj. [from legislator.] Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative phrenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.

The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LE'GISLATOR. n. s. [legislator, Latin; legislateur, French.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.

Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLA'TORSHIP.* n. s. [from legislator.] Power of making laws.

There ought to be a difference made between coming out of pupilage, and leaping into legislatorship. Ld. Halifax.

LEGISLA'TRESS.* n. s. [from legislator.] A female lawgiver.

See what that country of the mind will produce, when by the wholesome laws of this legislatress it has obtained its liberty. Shaftesbury, Moral. P. iv. § 2.

LE'GISLATURE. n. s. [from legislator, Latin.] The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made. Hale, Com. Law.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power, but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift, Sentim. of a Ch. of Eng. Man.

LE'GIST.* n. s. [lex, legis, Lat. the law; legiste, old French. Our old lexicography gives legister, as an obsolete word for lawyer. Bullokar, and Cockeram. Chaucer uses it. Test. of Love.] One skilled in law.

Far be it from my sharp satirick muse
Those grave and reverend legists to abuse,
That aid Astræa. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) ii. 7

The decretists and legists derided their ignorance.
A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Oxf.

Legi'timacy. n. s. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.

In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.

The legitimacy or reality of these marine bodies vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

LEGI'TIMATE.† adj. [from legitimus, Lat. legitime, Fr.]

1. Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shakspeare.

An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion. Bp. Taylor.

2. Genuine; not spurious: as, a legitimate work, the legitimate production of such an author.

3. Lawful: as, a legitimate course of proceeding.

To Legi'timate.† v. a. [legitimer, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.

None of your holy fathers as yet have been able to legitimate the child. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 150.

Legitimate him that was a bastard. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To make lawful.

To enact a statute of that which he dares not seem to approve, even to legitimate vice, to make sin itself, the ever alien and vassal sin, a free citizen of the commonwealth, pretending only these or these plausible reasons! Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 2.

It would be impossible for any enterprize to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Legi'timately.† adv. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfully.

Those who were born of harlots, were not bound by the law to nourish or relieve their parents, as they were who were legitimately born. Knatchbull, Tr. Annot. N. Test. p. 25.

2. Genuinely.

By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat,
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

Legi'timateness.* n. s. [from legitimate.] Legality; lawfulness.

The fathers of Constantinople, in their letter to pope Damasus and the occidental bishops, approved and commended Flavianus to them, highly asserting the legitimateness of his ordination. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

Legitima'tion.† n. s. [legitimation, French; from legitimate.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaim'd my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:
Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakspeare, K. John.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine. Locke.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

He legitimated the duke's natural children by Katherine Swinford, whom he had lately married; he got their legitimation confirmed by parliament; and heaped upon them honours and preferments. Lowth, Life of Wykeham, p. 234.

LE'GUME. }
LEGU'MEN. } n. s. [legume, French; legumen, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans: In general all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbuthnot.

Legu'minous. adj. [legumineux, French; from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds: as oats, barley, and wheat; or of some of the siliquose or leguminous; as, peas or beans. Arbuthnot.

Le'iger.* }
Leiger-book. } See Leger, and Leger-book.

Le'isurable.† adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inexcusable in his works of leisurable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.

A French gentleman, there consul-general for his nation, stayed me to take a leisurable view of that kingdom. Blount, Voy. to the Levant, p. 108.

He publickly declared himself ready and desirous to assist any person single, and particularly invited such to come at their leisurable hours. Fell, Life of Hammond, § 2.

Le'isurably.† adv. [from leisurable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisurably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity. Hooker.

Here men must follow the shore; wind about leisurably; and insinuate their useful alterations by soft and unperceivable degrees. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 66.

LE'ISURE. n. s. [loisir, Fr.]

1. Freedom from business or hurry; a vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can discompose your mind. Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisures to attend on yours. Shakspeare.

They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

O happy youth!
For whom thy fates reserve so fair a bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden, Ov.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen;
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Le'isure.* adj. Convenient; free from business or hurry. We now say, leisure hours, leisure time.

Here pause, my Gothic lyre, a little while:
The leisure hour is all that thou canst claim. Beattie.

Le'isurely. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty: deliberate; done without hurry.

He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious. Shakspeare.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Hayward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threescore and ten intire arches. Addison.

Le'isurely. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or if with caution leisurely we past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.

Le'man.† n. s. [Generally supposed to be l'aimant, the lover, French; but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from lief, Dutch, or leoꝼ, Saxon, beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman. Dr. Johnson. — Junius is right; that is, the word comes from the Sax. leoꝼ; and, as man in the Saxon language, signifies both man and woman, leman was used both for male and female sweethearts. Barret terms a leman "a married man's concubine," Alv. 1580. Shakspeare, a married woman's gallant; "Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman." Merr. Wives of Windsor.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress.

[He] said, he wolde
Her lemman be, whether she wolde or n'olde.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

Unto his lemman Dalida he [Sampson] told,
That in his heres all his strengthe lay:
And falsely to his fomen him she sold. Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;
But, vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take. Spenser, F. Q.

A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Leme.* n. s. [leoma, Saxon; liome, Icel. splendour; lauhmon, Goth. lightning.] A ray; a beam; a flash: as, "a leam or flame of fire, a leam of lightning." Huloet. See also Gleam.

Fire with red lemes. Chaucer, Nonnes Pr. Tale.

Thereby the incomprehensible majestic of God, as it were by a bright leme of a torch or candle, is declared to the blinde inhabitants of this world. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 2.

To Leme. v. n. [leoman, Saxon.] To shine; to blaze. Both the verb and substantive are obsolete.

Le'mma.† n. s. [λῆμμα; lemme, Fr.] A proposition previously assumed.

I shall premise the following lemma: If with a view to demonstrate any proposition, a certain point is proposed, by virtue of which certain other points are attained; and such supposed point be itself afterwards destroyed or rejected by a contrary supposition; in that case, all the other points, attained thereby and consequent thereupon, must also be destroyed and rejected, so as from thence forward to be no more supposed or applied in the demonstration. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 12.

LE'MON. n. s. [limon, French; limonium, low Lat.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges. Arbuthnot.

The dyers use it for dying of bright yellows and lemon colours. Mortimer.

Bear me, Pomona!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty. Miller.

Lemona'de. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Thou, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

*LE'MURES. n. s. pl. [Latin.] Hobgoblins; evil spirits among the ancients.

In consecrated earth,
And on the holy hearth,
The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

To LEND.† v. a. preterite, and part. pass. lent. [lænan, Saxon; leenen, Dutch; laena, Su. Goth. leiwhan, M. Goth. See Loan.]

1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heav'n. Shakspeare.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase. Lev. xxv. 37.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend. Dryden.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakspeare, All's Well.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend.
Dryden, to the D. of Ormond.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though unlike it in lending any back again. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Painting and poesy are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poesy, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor. Dryden, Pers.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak. Addison.

Cephisa, thou
Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes. A. Philips.

Le'ndable.* adj. [from lend.] That may be lent.
Sherwood.

Le'nder. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade. Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the banker's doors
To call in money. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

Le'nding.* n. s. [from lend.]

1. What is lent on condition of repayment.

Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

2. What is supplied in general.

Off, off, you lendings: Come, unbutton here.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Lends.* n. s. pl. [lenđenu, Saxon; lenden, Germ.] Loins. Obsolete.

A girdle of skyn aboute his leendis. Wicliffe, St. Matt. iii. 4.

A barme-cloth eke as white as morwe milk
Upon her lendes. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

LENGTH.† n. s. [lenʒeđ, the third person singular from the Sax. verb lenʒian. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in heighth near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Acron overthrows;
Stretch'd at his length he spurns the swarthy ground. Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay. Shakspeare, K. John.
To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;
Left danger, fears, and foes, behind,
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind. Hudibras.
Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past. Dryden, Ovid.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd,
What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast. Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths. Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss
With length of days, and every day like this. Dryden.
Such toil requir'd the Roman name,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame. Dryden, Æn.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging. Clarendon.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.

Churches purged of things burdensome, all was brought at the length into that wherein now we stand. Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both. Hooker.

10. At Length. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder. Dryden, K. Arthur.

To Length.* v. a. [lenȝian, Sax.] To extend; to make longer. Obsolete.

Was never man such favour could off atall ladies fynde,
To cause them lengthe or shorte the day which they to hym̃ assynde. Huloet in. V. Ladies of Destinie.
[He] knows full well life doth but length his pain.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

To Le'ngthen. v. a. [from length. Sax. lenȝian.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Falling dews with spangles deck'd the glade,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life. Shakspeare.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity. Atterbury, Serm.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. To Lengthen out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.
I'd hoard up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

To Le'ngthen. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.

Still 'tis farther from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

Le'ngthening.* n. s. from lengthen.] Continuation; protraction.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Dan. iv. 27.

Le'ngthful.* adj. [length and full.] Of great measure in length.

The driver whirls his lengthful thong,
The horses fly, the chariot smokes along. Pope, Iliad.

Le'ngthwise. adv. [length and wise.] According to the length, in a longitudinal direction.

LE'NIENT. adj. [leniens, Latin.]

1. Assuasive; softening; mitigating.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last sand. Pope.

2. With of.

Consolatories writ
With studied argument, and much persuasion sought,
Lenient of grief and anxious thought. Milton, S. A.

3. Laxative; emollient.

Oils relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamick, and abate acrimony in the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Le'nient. n. s. An emollient, or assuasive application.

I dressed it with lenients. Wiseman, Surgery.

To Le'nify. v. n. [lenifier, old French; lenio, Latin.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue. Bacon.

All soft'ning simples, known of sov'reign use,
He presses out, and pours their noble juice;
These first infus'd, to lenify the pain,
He tugs with pincers, but he tugs in vain. Dryden.

Le'niment.* n. s. [lenimentum, Lat.] An assuaging. Cockeram.

Le'nitive. adj. [lenitif, Fr. lenio, Lat.] Assuasive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon.

There is aliment lenitive expelling the fœces without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils. Arbuthnot.

Le'nitive.† n. s.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

An apothecary's shop, wherein are remedies — alternatives, corroboratives, lenitives. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 279.

2. A palliative.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply before it would be brought to decretory rigours. South, Serm.

Le'nity. n. s. [lenitas, Lat.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent,
Of meer compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Lenity must gain
The mighty men, and please the discontent. Daniel.

Albeit so ample a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated. Hayward.

These jealousies
Have but one root, the old imprison'd king,
Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd:
But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Æsop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryden.

LENS. n. s. From resemblance to the seed of a lental.

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually called a lens; such as is a burning-glass, or spectacle glass, or an object glass of a telescope. Newton, Opticks.

According to the difference of the lenses, I used various distances. Newton, Opticks.

LENT. part. pass. from lend.

By Jove, the stranger and the poor are sent,
And what to those we give, to Jove is lent. Pope, Odys.

LENT.† n. s. [lenten, the spring, Saxon; from the Goth. hlana, to grow warm, as the air in the spring does. Serenius.] The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ashwednesday to Easter.

Lent is from springing, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitors, the Germans, use glent. Camden.

LENT.* adj. [lentus, Latin.] Slow; mild. Not in use.

We must now increase
Our fire to "ignis ardens," we are past
"Fimus equinus, balnei cineris,"
And all those lenter heats. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

LE'NTEN. adj. [from lent.] Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

She quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a lenten sallad cool'd her blood.
Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

LENTI'CULAR. adj. [lenticulaire, French.] Doubly convex; of the form of a lens.

The crystalline humour is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on Creation.

LE'NTIFORM. adj. [lens and forma, Latin.] Having the form of a lens.

LENTI'GINOUS. adj. [from lentigo.] Scurfy; furfuraceous.

LENTI'GO. n. s. [Latin.] A freckly or scurfy eruption upon the skin; such especially as is common to women in child-bearing. Quincy.

LE'NTIL. n. s. [lens, Latin; lentille, French.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, the pointal of which becomes a short pod, containing orbicular seeds, for the most part convex; the leaves are conjugated, growing to one mid-rib, and are terminated by tendrils. Miller.

The Philistines were gathered together, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles. 2 Sam. xxiii. 11.

LE'NTISCK.† } n. s [lentiscus, Latin; lentisque, Fr.]
LENTI'SCUS. } Lentisck wood is of a pale brown, almost whitish, resinous, fragrant and acrid: it is the tree which produces mastich, esteemed astringent and balsamick. Hill.

Lentisck is a beautiful evergreen, the mastich or gum of which is of use for the teeth or gums. Mortimer, Husbandry.

The weepings of the lentiscus and cypress. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 28.

LE'NTITUDE. n. s. [from lentus, Latin.] Sluggishness; slowness. Dict.

LE'NTNER. n. s. A kind of hawk.

I should enlarge my discourse to the observation of the haggard, and the two sorts of lentners. Walton, Angler.

LE'NTOR. n. s. [lentor, Latin; lenteur, French.]

1. Tenacity; viscosity.

Some bodies have a kind of lentor, and more depectible nature than others. Bacon.

2. Slowness; delay; sluggish coldness.

The lentor of eruptions, not inflammatory, points to an acid cause. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. [In physick.] That sizy, viscid, coagulated part of the blood, which, in malignant fevers, obstructs the capillary vessels. Quincy.

LE'NTOUS. adj. [lentus, Latin.] Viscous; tenacious; capable to be drawn out.

In this spawn of a lentous and transparent body, are to be discerned many specks which become black, a substance more compacted and terrestrious than the other; for it riseth not in distillation. Brown.

L'ENVOY.* See the fourth sense of ENVOY.

LE'O. * n. s. [Latin, the lion.] The fifth sign of the zodiack.

By Leo, and the Virgin, and the Scales. Milton, P. L.

LE'OD.† n. s. Leod signifies the people; or, rather, a nation, country, &c. Thus leodgar is one of great interest with the people or nation. Gibson's Camden.

Thus leid, in old Cornish, a tribe. Chaucer uses leos, from the Greek λαὸς, for people.

Leos people in English is to say. Second Nonnes Tale.

LE'OF. n. s. Leof denotes love; so leofwin is a winner of love; leofstan, best beloved: like these Agapetus, Erasmus, Philo, Amandus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

LE'ONINE.† adj. [leoninus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a lion; having the nature of a lion.

So was he ful of leonin corage. Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

2. Leonine verses are those of which the end rhimes to the middle, so named from Leo the inventor: as,

Gloria factorum temere conceditur horum. Dr. Johnson.

Leo was not the inventor of Leonine verses, but Leontius. Menagiana, tom. ii. p. 214.

If he delighteth in odd-contrived fancies, he may please himself with antistrophes, rebusses, leonine verses, &c. to be found in Sieur des Accords. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 127.

Leonine verses are properly the Roman hexameters or pentameters rhymed. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 2.

LE'OPARD. n. s. [leo and pardus, Latin.] A spotted beast of prey.

Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Before the king tame leopards led the way,
And troops of lions innocently play. Dryden.

A leopard is every way, in shape and actions, like a cat: his head, teeth, tongue, feet, claws, tail, all like a cat's: he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kittens; leaps at the prey, as a cat at a mouse; and will also spit much after the same manner: so that they seem to differ, just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew, Museum.

LEOPARDS-BANE.* n. s. The name of an herb.

LE'PER. n. s. [lepra, leprosus, Latin.] One infected with a leprosy.

I am no loathsome leper; look on me. Shakspeare.
The leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent. Lev. xiii. 45.

LE'PEROUS. adj. [Formed from leprous, to make out a verse.] Causing leprosy; infected with leprosy; leprous.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a viol,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distilment. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

LE'PID.* adj. [lepidus, Latin.] Pleasant; merry; lively; quick. Cockeram.

Some elegant figures and tropes of rhetorick do lie very near upon the confines of jocularity, and are not easily discerned from those sallies of wit, wherein the lepid way doth consist. Barrow, i. 14.

LE'PORINE. adj. [leporinus, Lat.] Belonging to a hare; having the nature of a hare.

LEPRO'SITY. n. s. [from leprous.] Squamous disease.

If the crudities, impurities, and leprosities of metals were cured, they would become gold. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

LE'PROSY.† n. s. [lepra, Latin; lepre, French. Formerly our word was lepry; as in Huloet's old dictionary.] A loathsome distemper, which covers the body with a kind of white scales.

Itches, blains,
So all the Athenian bosoms, and their crop
Be general leprosy. Shakspeare, Timon.

It is a plague of leprosy. Lev. xiii. 3.

Between the malice of my enemies and other men's mistakes, I put as great a difference as between the itch of novelty and the leprosy of disloyalty. King Charles.

Authors, upon the first entrance of the pox, looked upon it so highly infectious, that they ran away from it as much as the Jews did from the leprosy. Wiseman, Surgery.

LE'PROUS.† adj. [lepra, Latin; lepreux, French.] Infected with a leprosy.

He put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow. Exod. iv. 6.

The silly amorous sucks his death,
By drawing in a leprous harlot's breath. Donne.

LE'PROUSLY.* adv. [from leprous.] In an infectious degree.

Do but imagine
Now the disease has left you, how leprously
That office would have cling'd unto your forehead.
Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy.

LE'PROUSNESS.* n. s. [from leprous.] State of being leprous. Sherwood.

LERE.† n. s. læɼe, Saxon; leere, Dutch.]

1. A lesson; lore; doctrine. Obsolete. This sense is still retained in Scotland.

The kid, pitying his heaviness,
Asked the cause of his great distress;
And also who, and whence, that he were.
Tho he, that had well ycon'd his lere,
Thus medled his talk with many a teare. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Skill; scholarship. In this sense lare, or lair, is used in the north of England.

He was invulnerable made by magick leare.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 4.

To LERE.* v. a. [læɼan, Saxon, to teach; leren, Germ. to teach and to learn; laerd, Icel. learned.]

1. To learn. So used in the north of England. "Lewed or lered:" ignorant or learned. Piers Pl. Crede.

As children lered their antiphonere. Chaucer, Prioress. Tale.
He of Tityrus his songs did lere. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. To teach.

I then did lear
A lore repugnant to thy parents' faith. Fairfax, Tasso.

LERE.* adj. Empty. See LEAR.

LE'RRY. [from lere.] A rating; a lecture. Rustick word.

LESS.† A negative or privative termination. [læɼ, Saxon; loos, Dutch.] Joined to a substantive, it implies the absence or privation of the thing expressed by that substantive: as, a witless man, a man without wit; childless, without children; fatherless, deprived of a father; pennyless, wanting money. Dr. Johnson.

The imperative leɼ of the Sax. verb leɼan, to dismiss, has given to our language such adjectives as hopeless, restless, deathless, motionless, &c. i. e. dismiss hope, rest, death, motion, &c. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 173.

LESS.* conj. [leɼ, Sax. imper. of leɼan, to dismiss. Mr. H. Tooke.] Unless.

To tell you true, 'tis too good for you,
Less you had grace to follow it. B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

You should not ask, less you knew how to give.
Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

And the mute silence hist along,
Less Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest, saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton, Il Pens.

LESS. adj. [læɼ, Saxon.] The comparative of little: opposed to greater, or to so great; not so much; not equal.

Mary, the mother of James the less. St. Mar. xv. 40.

He that thinks he has a positive idea of infinite space will find, that he can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space; for in this latter we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

All the ideas that are considered as having parts, and are capable of increase by the addition of any equal or less parts, afford us, by their repetition, the idea of infinity. Locke.

'Tis less to conquer, than to make wars cease,
And, without fighting, awe the world to peace. Ld. Halifax.

LESS. n. s. Not so much; opposed to more, or to as much.

They gathered some more, some less. Exod. xvi. 17.

Thy servant knew nothing of this, less or more. 1 Sam.

Yet could he not his closing eyes withdraw,
Though less and less of Emily he saw. Dryden.

LESS. adv. In a smaller degree; in a lower degree.

This opinion presents a less merry, but not less dangerous, temptation to those in adversity. Decay of Chr. Piety.

The less space there is betwixt us and the object, and the more pure the air is, by so much the more the species are preserved and distinguished; and, on the contrary, the more space of air there is, and the less it is pure, so much the more the object is confused and embroiled. Dryden.

Their learning lay chiefly in flourish; they were not much wiser than the less pretending multitude. Collier on Pride.

The less they themselves want from others, they will be less careful to supply the necessities of the indigent. Smalridge.

Happy, and happy still, she might have prov'd,
Were she less beautiful, or less belov'd. Pope, Statius.

To LESS.* v. a. To make less. Obsolete.

What he will make lesse, he lesseth. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

LESSE'E. n. s. The person to whom a lease is given.

To LE'SSEN.† v. a. [from less.]

1. To make less; to diminish in bulk.

Up to yon hill;
Your legs are young: I'll tread these flats. Consider
When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place that lessens, and sets off. Shakspeare, Cymb.

2. To diminish the degree of any state or quality; to make less intense.

Kings may give
To beggars, and not lessen their own greatness. Denham.

Though charity alone will not make one happy in the other world, yet it shall lessen his punishment. Calamy, Serm.

Collect into one sum as great a number as you please, this multitude, how great soever, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it, or brings him any nearer the end of the inexhaustible stock of number. Locke.

This thirst after fame betrays him into such indecencies as are a lessening to his reputation, and is looked upon as a weakness in the greatest characters. Addison, Spect.

Nor are the pleasures which the brutal part of the creation enjoy, subject to be lessened by the uneasiness which arises from fancy. Atterbury, Serm.

3. To degrade; to deprive of power or dignity.

Who seeks
To lessen thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton, P. L.

St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury, Serm.

To LE'SSEN. v. n. To grow less; to shrink; to be diminished.

All government may be esteemed to grow strong or weak, as the general opinion in those that govern is seen to lessen or increase. Temple.

The objection lessens much, and comes to no more than this, there was one witness of no good reputation. Atterbury.

LE'SSER.† adj. A barbarous corruption of less, formed by the vulgar from the habit of terminating comparatives in er; afterwards adopted by poets, and then by writers of prose, till it has all the authority which a mode originally erroneous can derive from custom. Dr. Johnson.

Little has two comparatives, less and lesser. Use leaves us at liberty to employ either. The sound will direct us when to prefer the one to the other. As Addison's "Attend to what a lesser Muse indites," is clearly better than a less Muse. But, in general, it may be a good rule, to join less with a singular noun, and lesser with a plural; as, when we say, a less difficulty, and lesser difficulties. The reason is, that few singular nouns terminate in s, and most plural nouns do. Worser, the second comparative of bad, has not the same authority to plead as lesser, and is not, I think, of equal use. Our grammarians do not enough attend to the influence which the ear has in modelling a language. Bp. Hurd.

What great despite doth fortune to thee bear,
Thus lowly to abase thy beauty bright,
That it should not deface all other lesser light? Spenser, F. Q.

It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes than men their minds. Shakspeare.

The mountains, and higher parts of the earth, grow lesser and lesser from age to age: sometimes the roots of them are weakened by subterraneous fires, and sometimes tumbled by earthquakes into caverns that are under them. Burnet.

Cain, after the murder of his brother, cries out, Every man that findeth me shall slay me. By the same reason may a man, in the state of nature, punish the lesser breaches of that law. Locke.

The larger here, and there the lesser lambs,
The new-fall'n young herd bleating for their dams. Pope.

LE'SSER. adv. [formed by corruption from less.]

Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

LE'SSES. n. s. [laissées, French.] The dung of beasts left on the ground.

LE'SSON.† n. s. [leçon, Fr. lectio, Lat. Dr. Johnson.— Gothick, laiseins; from laisgan, to teach.]

1. Any thing read or repeated to a teacher, in order to improvement.

I but repeat that lesson
Which I have learn'd from thee. Denham, Sophy.

2. Precept; notion inculcated.

This day's ensample hath this lesson dear
Deep written in my heart with iron pen,
That bliss may not abide in state of mortal men. Spenser, F. Q.

Be not jealous over the wife of thy bosom, and teach her not an evil lesson against thyself. Ecclus. ix. 1.

3. Portion of Scripture read in divine service.

Notwithstanding so eminent properties, whereof lessons are happily destitute; yet lessons being free from some inconveniencies whereunto sermons are most subject, they may, in this respect, no less take, than in other they must give the hand which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hooker.

4. Tune pricked for an instrument.

Those good laws were like good lessons set for a flute out of tune; of which lessons little use can be made, till the flute be made fit to be played on. Davies on Ireland.

5. A rating lecture.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

To LE'SSON.† v. a. [Goth. laisgan, to teach.] To teach; to instruct.

Even in kind love, I do conjure thee,
To lesson me. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Well hast thou lesson'd us, this shall we do. Shakspeare.

How irreconciliation with our brethren voids all our addresses to God, we need be lessoned no farther than from our Saviour's owne mouth. Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 71.

Children should be seasoned betimes, and lessoned into a contempt and detestation of this vice. L'Estrange, Fab.

LE'SSOR. n. s. One who lets any thing to farm, or otherwise, by lease.

Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Denham.

If he demises the glebe to a layman, the tenant must pay the small tithes to the vicar, and the great tithes to the lessor. Ayliffe, Parergon.

LEST.† conj. [from the adjective least. Dr. Johnson. — Lest (i. e. lesed) is nothing else but the participle past of the Sax. leſan, to dismiss; and, with the article that, (either expressed or understood,) means no more than hoc dimisso, or quo dimisso. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 224.]

1. This particle may be sometimes resolved into that not, meaning prevention or care lest a thing should happen.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed, lest if he should exceed, then thy brother should seem vile. Deut. xxv.

Lest they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
All terrour hide. Milton, P. L.

My labour will sustain me, and lest cold
Or heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbesought provided. Milton, P. L.

King Luitprand brought hither the corps, lest it might be abused by the barbarous nations. Addison on Italy.

2. It sometimes means only that, with a kind of emphasis.

One doubt
Pursues me still, lest all I cannot die,
Lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod. Milton, P. L.

LE'STERCOCK. n. s. They have a device of two sticks filled with corks, and crossed flatlong, out of whose midst there riseth a thread, and at the same hangeth a sail; to this engine, termed a lestercock, they tie one end of their boulter, so as the wind coming from the shore filleth the sail, and the sail carrieth the boulter into the sea, which, after the respite of some hours, is drawn in again by a cord fastened at the nearer end. Carew.

To LET.† v. a. [lætan, Sax. letan, Goth. to permit.]

1. To allow; to suffer; to permit.

Where there is a certainty and an uncertainty, let the uncertainty go, and hold to that which is certain. Bp. Sanderson.

Remember me; speak, Raymond, will you let him?
Shall he remember Leonora? Dryden, Span. Friar.

We must not let go manifest truths, because we cannot answer all questions about them. Collier.

One who fixes his thoughts intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas in his mind, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration. Locke.

A solution of mercury in aqua fortis being poured upon iron, copper, tin, or lead, dissolves the metal, and lets go the mercury. Newton, Opticks.

2. A sign of the optative mood used before the first and imperative before the third person. Before the first person singular it signifies resolution, fixed purpose, or ardent wish.

Let me die with the Philistines. Judges.

Here let me sit,
And hold high converse with the mighty dead. Thomson.

3. Before the first person plural, let implies exhortation.

Rise; let us go. St. Mark.

Let us seek out some desolate shade. Shakspeare.

4. Before the third person, singular or plural, let implies permission.

Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause. Milton, Sonnet.

5. Or precept.

Let the soldiers seize him for one of the assassinates. Dryden.

6. Sometimes it implies concession.

O'er golden sands let rich Pactolus flow,
Or trees weep amber on the banks of Po,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

7. Before a thing in the passive voice, let implies command.

Let not the objects which ought to be contiguous be separated, and let those which ought to be separated be apparently so to us; but let this be done by a small and pleasing difference. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

8. Let has an infinitive mood after it without the particle to, as in the former examples.

But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest, and lie still. Exodus.

9. To leave: in this sense it is commonly followed by alone; but formerly was also unaccompanied.

Yet nether spinnes nor cards, ne cares nor frets,
But to her mother Nature all her care she letts.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 17.

They did me too much injury,
That ever said I hearken'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you. Shakspeare.

The publick outrages of a destroying tyranny are but childish appetites, let alone till they are grown ungovernable. L'Estrange, Fab.

Let me alone to accuse him afterwards. Dryden, Sp. Friar.

This is of no use, and had been better let alone: he is fain to resolve all into present possession. Locke.

Nestor, do not let us alone till you have shortened our necks, and reduced them to their ancient standard. Addison.

This notion might be let alone and despised, as a piece of harmless unintelligible enthusiasm. Rogers, Serm.

10. To more than permit; to give.

There's a letter for you, Sir, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

11. To put to hire; to grant to a tenant.

Solomon had a vineyard at Baal Hamon; he let the vineyard unto keepers. Canticles, viii. 11.

Nothing deadens so much the composition of a picture as figures which appertain not to the subject: we may call them figures to be let. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

She let her second floor to a very genteel man. Tatler.

A law was enacted, prohibiting all bishops, and other ecclesiastical corporations, from letting their lands for above the term of twenty years. Swift.

12. To suffer any thing to take a course which requires no impulsive violence. In this sense it is commonly joined with a particle.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Joshua.

LET

Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. St. Luke, vi. 4.

Let down thy pitcher, that I may drink. Gen. xxiv. 14.

The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water. Prov. xvii. 14.

As terebration doth meliorate fruit, so doth pricking vines or trees after they be of some growth, and thereby letting forth gum or tears. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

And if I knew which way to do't,
Your honour safe, I'd let you out. Hudibras.

The letting out our love to mutable objects doth but enlarge our hearts, and make them the wider marks for fortune to be wounded. Boyle.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold;
Like nature letting down the springs of life. Dryden.

From this point of the story, the poet is let down to his traditional poverty. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

You must let it down, that is, make it softer by tempering it. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

13. To permit to take any state or course.

Finding an ease in not understanding, he let loose his thoughts wholly to pleasure. Sidney.

He was let loose among the woods as soon as he was able to ride on horseback, or carry a gun. Addison, Spect.

14. To Let be. To leave off; to discontinue.

Son, said he then, let be thy bitter scorn,
And leave the rudeness of that antique age. Spenser, F. Q.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advice. Spenser, F. Q.

15. To Let be. To let go; to let alone.

Eftsoones he gan to rage, and inly frett,
Crying, Let be that lady debonnaire,
Thou recreaunt knight! Spenser, F. Q.

Let be; let us see, whether Elias will come to save him. St. Matt. xxvii. 49.

On the crowd he cast a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength before he spoke;
Back on your lives; let be, said he, my prey,
And let my vengeance take the destin'd way.
Dryden, Theod. and Honoria.

16. To Let blood, is elliptical for to let out blood. To free it from confinement; to suffer it to stream out of the vein.

Be rul'd by me;
Let's purge this choler without letting blood. Shakspeare.

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret castle. Shakspeare.

Hippocrates let great quantities of blood, and opened several veins at a time. Arbuthnot on Coins.

17. To Let blood, is used with a dative of the person whose blood is let.

As terebration doth meliorate fruit, so doth letting plants blood, as pricking vines, thereby letting forth tears. Bacon.

18. To Let in. To admit.

Let in your king, whose labour'd spirits
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakspeare.

Roscetes presented his army before the gates of the city, in hopes that the citizens would raise some tumult, and let him in. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

What boots it at one gate to make defence
And at another to let in the foe,

The more tender our spirits are made by religion, the more easy we are to let in grief, if the cause be innocent. Bp. Taylor.

They but preserve the ashes, thou the flame
True to his sense, but truer to his fame,
Fording his current, where thou find'st it low,
Let'st in thine own to make it rise and flow. Denham.

To give a period to my life, and to his fears, you're welcome; here's a throat, a heart, or any other part, ready to let in death, and receive his commands. Denham.

19. If a noun follows, for let in, let into is required.

It is the key that lets them into their very heart, and enables them to command all that is there. South, Serm.

There are pictures of such as have been distinguished by their birth or miracles, with inscriptions, that let you into the name and history of the person represented. Addison.

Most historians have spoken of ill success, and terrible events, as if they had been let into the secrets of Providence, and made acquainted with that private conduct by which the world is governed. Addison.

These are not mysteries for ordinary readers to be let into. Addison.

As we rode through the town, I was let into the characters of all the inhabitants; one was a dog, another a whelp, and another a cur. Addison, Freeholder.

20. To LET in, or into. To procure admission.

They should speak properly and correctly, whereby they may let their thoughts into other men's minds the more easily. Locke.

As soon as they have hewn down any quantity of the rocks, they let in their springs and reservoirs among their works. Addison on Italy.

21. To LET off. To discharge. Originally used of an arrow dismissed from the gripe, and therefore suffered to fly off the string: now applied to guns.

Charging my pistol with powder, I cautioned the emperor not to be afraid, and then let it off in the air. Swift.

22. To LET out. To lease out; to give to hire or farm.

To LET.† v. a. [lettan, Sax. to hinder; letten, Dutch; probably from the Goth. latjan, to delay.]

1. To hinder; to obstruct; to oppose.

Their senses are not letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience. Sidney.

To glorify him in all things, is to do nothing whereby the name of God may be blasphemed; nothing whereby the salvation of Jew or Grecian, or any in the church of Christ, may be let or hindered. Hooker.

Leave, ah, leave off, whatever wight thou be,
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying soul's tranquillity! Spenser, F. Q.

Wherefore do ye let the people from their works? go you unto your burdens. Exod. v. 4.

The mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. 2 Thes.

I will work, and who will let it? Isa. xliii. 11.

And now no longer letted of his prey,
He leaps up at it with enrag'd desire,
O'erlooks the neighbours with a wide survey,
And nods at every house his threatening fire. Dryden, Ann. Mir.

2. To LET, when it signifies to permit, or leave, has let in the preterite and part. passive; but when it signifies to hinder, it has letted; as, "multa me impedierunt," many things have letted me. Introduct. to Grammar.

To LET. v. n. To forbear; to withold himself.

After king Ferdinando had taken upon him the person of a fraternal ally to the king, he would not let to counsel the king. Bacon, Hen. VII.

LET. n. s. [from the verb.] Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction; impediment.

The secret lets and difficulties in public proceedings are innumerable and inevitable. Hooker.

Solyman without let presented his army before the city of Belgrade. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

It had been done e'er this, had I been consul:
We had had no stop, no let. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Just judge, two lets remove; that free from dread,
I may before thy high tribunal plead. Sandys, Paraphr. of Job.

To these internal dispositions to sin add the external opportunities and occasions concurring with them, and removing all lets and rubs out of the way, and making the path of destruction plain before the sinner's face; so that he may run his course freely. South.

LET, the termination of diminutive words, from lyte, Saxon, little, small; as, rivulet, a small stream; hamlet, a little village.

LE'THAL.* adj. [lethalis, Latin.] Deadly; mortal. Cockeram.

Vengeance' wings bring on thy lethal day. Cupid's Whirligig, (1616.)

Could not your heavenly charms, your tuneful voice,
Have sooth'd the rage of rueful fate, and stay'd
The lethal blow? — Ah me, if heavenly charms,
If softest melody could soothe the rage
Of rueful fate, our Phoebe had not died. W. Richardson.

LETHA'LITY.* n. s. [from lethal, Lat. lethaliter.] Mortality. Bailey.

The certain punishment being preferable to the doubtful lethality of the fetish. Atkins, Voyage, p. 104.

LETHA'RGICAL.* adj. [lethargicus, Lat.] Sleepy by disease; lethargick.

LETHA'RGICALLY.* adv. [from lethargical.] In a morbid sleepiness.

Mr. Muzzy was not only unwieldy, but so lethargically stupid, that he fell asleep even in musical assemblies. Ld. Corke.

LETHA'RGICALNESS.* n. s. [from lethargical.] Morbid sleepiness.

That thou mayst be the more effectually roused up out of this tepidity and lethargicalness. More on the Seven Churches, ch. 9.

LETHA'RGICK. adj. [lethargique, Fr. from lethargy.] Sleepy by disease, beyond the natural power of sleep.

Vengeance is as if minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Let me but try if I can wake his pity
From his lethargick sleep. Denham, Sophy.

A legarthy demands the same cure and diet as an apoplexy from a phlegmatick case, such being the constitution of the lethargick. Arbuthnot on Diet.

LETHA'RGICKNESS n. s. [from lethargick.] Morbid sleepiness; drowsiness to a disease.

A grain of glory mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever, and lethargickness. Herbert.

LE'THARGY. n. s. [ληθαργία; lethargie, French.] A morbid drowsiness; a sleep from which one cannot be kept awake.

The lethargy must have his quiet course;
If not, he foams at mouth, and by and by
Breaks out to savage madness. Shakspeare.

Though his eye is open as the morning's,
Towards lusts and pleasures; yet so fast a lethargy
Has seiz'd his powers towards public cares and dangers,
He sleeps like death. Denham, Sophy.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy; and was no otherwise to be rescued from it, but by one that would cry mightily. Atterbury.

A lethargy is a lighter sort of apoplexy, and demands the same cure and diet. Arbuthnot on Diet.

LE'THARGIED. adj. [from the noun.] Laid asleep; entranced.

His motion weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

LE'THE.† n. s. [λήθη, Greek, forgotten; léthé, French.]

1. Oblivion; a draught of oblivion.

The conquering wine hath steept our sense
In soft and delicate lethe. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth, which whoso drinks
Forgets both joy and grief. Milton, P. L.

2. Death. [lethum, Lat. In this sense, it was probably spoken as a word of only one syllable; in the former it consists of two.] Obsolete.

Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart,
Here didst thou fall: and here thy hunters stand,
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe.
Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

LETHE'AN.* adj. [from lethe.] Oblivious; causing oblivion.

I did not think Suffolk waters had such a lethean quality in them, as to cause such an "amnestia" in him of his friends here upon the Thames. Howell, Lett. iii. 6.

Ovid makes mention of a certain oblivious or leathean love, to whom the ancient Romans dedicated a temple.
Ferrand, Love-Mel. p. 315.

They ferry over this lethean sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe. Milton, P. L.

LE'THEED.* adj. [from lethe.] Oblivious; lethean.

Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till a letheed dulness. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

LETHI'FEROUS.* adj. [lethifer, Lat.] Deadly; bringing death. Bailey.

Those that are really lethiferous, are but excrescencies of sin.
Dr. Robinson's Endoxa, (1658,) p. 151.

Their very words conveyed with a lethiferous air, were feared as bullets. Mem. of Sir Edm. Bury Godfrey. p. 40.

For his own good, a careless letter-go
Of money. B. Jonson, Horace's Art of Poetry.

LE'TTER.† n. s. [lettre, French; litera, Latin.]

1. One of the elements of syllables; a character in the alphabet.

A superscription was written over him in letters of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. Luke, xxiii. 38.

Thou whoreson Zed! thou unnecessary letter! Shakspeare.

2. A written message; an epistle.

They use to write it on the top of letters. Shakspeare.

I have a letter from her
Of such contents as you will wonder at. Shakspeare.

When a Spaniard would write a letter by him, the Indian would marvel how it should be possible, that he, to whom he came, should be able to know all things. Abbot.

The asses will do very well for trumpeters, and the hares will make excellent letter carriers. L'Estrange, Fab.

The style of letters ought to be free, easy, and natural; as near approaching to familiar conversation as possible: the two best qualities in conversation are, good humour and good breeding; those letters are therefore certainly the best that shew the most of these two qualities. Walsh.

Mrs. P. B. has writ to me, and is one of the best letter writers I know; very good sense, civility and friendship, without any stiffness or constraint. Swift.

3. The verbal expression; the literal meaning.

Touching translations of Holy Scripture, we may not disallow of their painful travels herein, who strictly have tied themselves to the very original letter. Hooker.

In obedience to human laws, we must observe the letter of the law, without doing violence to the reason of the law, and the intention of the lawgiver. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Those words of his must be understood not according to the bare rigour of the letter, but according to the allowances of expression. South, Serm.

What! since the pretor did my fetters loose,
And left me freely at my own dispose,
May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden, Pers.

4. Letters without the singular: learning.

The Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned? St. John, vii. 15.

5. Letters without the singular, used with the adjective patent: a written instrument, containing a royal grant. [literæ patentes, Lat.]

The king's grants are contained in letters-patent, so called, because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the great seal pendant at the bottom. Blackstone.

Call in his letters-patent, that he hath
By his attornies-general to sue. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

6. Any thing to be read.

Good laws are at best but a dead letter. Addison, Freeholder.

The iron ladles that letter founders use to the casting of printing letters, are kept constantly in melting metal. Moxon.

To LE'TTER. v. a. [from letter.] To stamp with letters.

I observed one weight lettered on both sides; and I found on one side, written in the dialect of men, and underneath it, calamities; on the other side was written, in the language of the gods, and underneath, blessings. Addison.

LE'TTERED.† adj. [from letter.] This is a very old word in our language; though Dr. Johnson has given no other example of it than that from Jeremy Collier. It is used by Chaucer; and is found in Huloet's dictionary with the definition of learned, "literatus," Lat.]

1. Literate; educated to learning; learned.

Your prelates ben not so wise,
Ne halfe so lettrid as am I. Chaucer, Rom. R. 7691.

A martial man, not sweetened by a lettered education, is apt to have a tincture of sourness. Collier on Pride.

2. Belonging to learning; suiting letters.

When stung with idle anxieties, or teazed with fruitless impertinence, or yawning over insipid diversions, then we perceive the blessing of a lettered recess.
Young, Conject. on Orig. Composition.

LE'TTERFOUNDER.* n. s. [letter and founder.] One who casts types for printing. See the seventh sense of LETTER.

LE'TTERLESS.* adj. [letter and less.] Ignorant; illiterate. Not in use.

A meer daring letterless commander can, in a rational way, promise himself no more success in his enterprise, than a mastif can in his contest with a lion.
Waterhous, Apol. for Learning, (1653,) p. 125.

LE'TTERPRESS.* n. s. [letter and press.] Print; what is given in types from a written copy.

If his merits are to be determined by judges who estimate the value of a book from its bulk, or its frontispiece, every rival must acquire an easy superiority, who with persuasive eloquence promises four extraordinary pages of letterpress, or three beautiful prints curiously coloured from nature.
Goldsmith, Ess. i.

LETTERS *Patent. See the fifth sense of LETTER.

LE'TTUCE. n. s. [lactuca, Latin.]

But opposite in levell'd west was set. Milton, P. L.

He will thy foes with silent shame confound,
And their proud structures level with the ground. Sandys.

3. To lay flat.

We know by experience, that all downright rains do evermore dissever the violence of outrageous winds, and beat down and level the swelling and mountainous billows of the sea. Ralegh.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns,
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And not regarding difference of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryden.

4. To bring to equality of condition.

Reason can never assent to the admission of those brutish appetites which would over-run the soul, and level its superiour with its inferiour faculties. Decay of Chr. Piety.

5. To point in taking aim; to aim.

Each at the head

One to the gunners on St. Jago's tower;
Bid 'em for shame level their cannon lower. Dryden.

Iron globes which on the victor host

The construction I believe is not, globes levell'd on the host, but globes levell'd smote on the host.

6. To direct to an end.

The whole body of puritans was drawn to be abettors of all villainy by a few men, whose designs from the first were levelled to destroy both religion and government. Swift.

7. To suit to proportion.

Behold the law
And rule of beings in your Maker's mind:
And thence, like limbecks, rich ideas draw,
To fit the levell'd use of humankind. Dryden.

To LE'VEL.† v. n.

1. To aim at; to bring the gun or arrow to the same line with the mark.

The glory of God, and the good of his church, was the thing which the apostles aimed at, and therefore ought to be the mark whereat we also level. Hooker.

2. To conjecture; to attempt to guess.

I pray thee overname them; and as thou namest them I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. To be in the same direction with a mark.

He to his engine flew,
Plac'd near at hand in open view,
And rais'd it till it levell'd right,
Against the glow worm tail of kite. Hudibras.

I stood i' the level
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and gave thanks
To you that choked it. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murther her. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

8. The line in which the sight passes.

Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind. Pope.

Le'veller.† n. s. [from level.]

1. One who makes any thing even; one who measures or lays by a level. Sherwood.

2. One who destroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.

The presbyterian must not hold himself secure, while the independent sits at stern; nor the independent free from fear, so long as the leveller, with the plausive promises of a pleasing parity, suggests to the commons of England (as if it were the year of jubilee) the enjoyment of a lawless and indisputable liberty. King Charles, cited in The Princely Pelican, ch. 9.

You are an everlasting leveller; you won't allow encouragement to extraordinary merit. Collier on Pride.

Is diversion grown a leveller, like death? Young, Centaur, Lett. 2.

LEVIATHAN. n. s. [לויתן.] A water animal mentioned in the book of Job. By some imagined the crocodile; but in poetry generally taken for the whale.

We may, as bootless, spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,

As send our precepts to the leviathan,
To come ashore. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
Canst thou draw out leviathan with an hook? Job.
More to embroil the deep; leviathan,
And his unweildy train, in dreadful sport
Tempest the loosen'd brine. Thomson, Winter.

To LE'VIGATE.† v. a. [lævigo, Latin.]

1. To polish; to smooth; to plane. Cockeram. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson. This is the primary sense of the word.

New objects with a gentle and grateful touch warble upon the corporeal organs, or excite the spirits into a pleasant frisk of motion; but when use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easy, that the spirits pass without any stop, those objects are no longer felt, or very faintly; so that the pleasure ceaseth. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 9.

The case of the vessel having been curiously levigated, (" ex lignis lævigatis et quadratis.") Biblioth, Bibl. i. 335.

2. To rub or grind to an impalpable powder.

3. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.

LE'VIGATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Figuratively, made smooth; lightened.

His labours being levigate and made more tolerable. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 11. b.

LEVIGA'TION. n. s. [from levigate.]

Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tutty, and precious stones, into a subtile powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but unless the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear as to double the weight of the medicine. Quincy.

LE'VIN.* n. s. [from hlıpan, Sax. to glister, to shine.] Lightning. Not now in use.

Wild thonder dint and firy leven. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.
The lightsome levin. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
As when the flashing levin haps to light
Upon two stubborn oaks. Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 40.

LEVITA'TION.* n. s. [levitas, levitatis, Lat.] Act or quality of rendering light, or buoyant.

The lungs also of birds, as compared with the lungs of quadrupeds, contain in them a provision distinguishingly calculated for this same purpose of levitation; namely, a communication (not found in other kinds of animals) between the air-vessels of the lungs and the cavities of the body: so that by the intromission of air from one to the other, (at the will, as it should seem, of the animal,) its body can be occasionally puffed out, and its tendency to descend in the air, or its specifick gravity made less. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 12. § 6.

LE'VITE. n. s. [levita, Latin, from Levi.]

1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.

In the Christian church, the office of deacons succeeded in the place of the levites among the Jews, who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. A priest: used in contempt.

LEVI'TICAL.† adj. [from levite.]

1. Belonging to the levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.

By the levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was adultery. Ayliffe.

2. Priestly.

Austin — sent to Rome Laurence and Peter, two of his associates, to acquaint the pope of his good success in England, and to be resolved of certain theological, or rather levitical, questions. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 4.

LEVI'TICALLY.* adv. [from levitical.] After the manner of the levites.

These pure conceited men quarrelled at the name of the holy seventh day, called, as of old, Sunday, which they would have named Sabbath; and thereafter would have it observed levitically, so strict as not to gather sticks. Franklyn, Annals of K. James I. p. 31.

What right of jurisdiction soever can be from this place levitically bequeathed, must descend upon the ministers of the Gospel equally. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

LE'VITY. n. s. [levitas, Latin.]

1. Lightness; not heaviness; the quality by which any body has less weight than another.

He gave the form of levity to that which ascended; to that which descended, the form of gravity. Ralegh.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluidity that encloses it, would ascend to the top. Bentley.

2. Inconstancy; changeableness.

They every day broached some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection. Hooker.

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,
Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call. Pope.

3. Unsteadiness; laxity of mind.

I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee;
Not out of levity, but over-power'd
By thy request. Milton, S. A.

4. Idle pleasure; vanity.

He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required. Calamy.

5. Trifling gaiety; want of seriousness.

Our graver business frowns at this levity. Shakspeare.

Hopton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted. Clarendon.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury, Serm.

To LE'VY. v. a. [lever, French.]

1. To raise; to bring together: applied to men.

He resolved to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army. Davies on Ireland.

2. To raise: applied to war. This sense, though Milton's, seems improper.

They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton.

3. To raise: applied to money.

Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war. Numb.

Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his county such a sum of money. Clarendon.

LE'VY. n. s. [from the verb.]

Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him further. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

LEW.* adj. [lauw, Germ. liew, Dutch; hlva, to be warm, Icelandick; hlıpan, hleopan, Sax. the same, of which Mr. Tooke considers lew as the participle past, hlıp, hleop.]

1. Not very warm; tepid; lukewarm. Lew-warm is still an expression in several parts of England. See also LUKEWARM.

Thou art lewe, and neither coold neither hoot. Wicliffe, Revel. iii.

2. Pale; wan; of a decayed hue. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

LEWD.† adj. [læpede, læpð, lepð, Saxon; as, læpede man, a layman; probably from leoð, the people. This is the primitive sense of the word. It next included the idea of ignorance; which Dr. Jamieson attributes to the influence of the clergy on the general sentiments of society, the unlearned being in old time treated by them in a very contemptuous manner. Next, as if moral excellence had been confined to their own order, the term was applied by them to signify a wicked person, or one of a licentious life; whence, Dr. Jamieson adds, the modern sense of our lewd. The sense, however, to which Dr. Jamieson alludes by the word modern, is of great age in our language; for Chaucer uses it in the sense of lustful, as well as ignorant.]

1. Lay; not clerical; gross; ignorant. Obsolete.

It was foundun that they weren men unlettrid, and lewide men. Wicliffe, Acts, iv.
